SPENT NIGHT IN BOAT

Nine People Adrift on the Lake After Ship Sank.

Vessel Was Bound for Cobourg With Cargo of Coal When It Went to the Bottom With Only a Brief Warning—Three Vessels Sighted But Fourth Affected Rescue.

KINGSTON, Ont., July 30.—Laden with a cargo of 400 tons of hard coal from Oswego, the steamer W. J. Carter, springing a leak in the stormtossed waters of the lake, sank practically without warning 150 fathoms of water about thirty miles off Long Point, at 10.30 Saturday night. The leak was first noticed by a fireman and the pumps were immediately manned, but without avail, the vessel beginning to fill with water with great rapidity. Captain James Quinn, of Toronto, thereupon gave orders for the two lifeboats to be made ready and for the crew to prepare to leave the ship. One of the lifeboats got befouled in the davits and it was found impossible to launch it, but the second boat was successfully floated. By this time the water had made such inroads into the steamer that the crew had to take to the lifeboat at once, no time being available for securing provisions or warm clothing.

The crew of nine, including the cook, Mrs. Catharine Readman, all boarded the lifeboat without mishap, and the waterlogged steamer soon afterwards went to the bottom. The lifeboat drifted about helplessly in the open lake all Saturday night, and although the lights of three vessels were sighted during this time, the occupants of the boat had no means of attracting their attention, and it was not until the early hours of Sunday morning that the little craft was sighted by Captain McKee, of the steamer Keyport, and a rescue affected. Captain McKee took the shipwrecked crew to Cape Vincent and they were brought to Kingston Sunday afternoon.

The crew of the ill-fated W. J. Carter consisted of: Captain, James Quinn, 132 Seaton street, Toronto; chief engineer, Thomas Ralphs, formerly of Toronto, now Fort Erie; second engineer, Robert Robertson; mate, Henry Mathews, Cobourg; wheelsman, Walter Smith, Napanee, and William Steadman, Aurora; firemen, James MacIver, Kingston, John Bernard McLaughlin, cook, Mrs. Catharine Readman, Toronto.

The W. J. Carter left at 5.30 on Saturday afternoon for Cobourg. All went well about noon, when the same night, when the leak was first noticed, and it was only half an hour after it was first discovered that the boat went to the bottom. Owing to the great depth of the water at the place where she sank, efforts to refloat the vessel would be useless, and she must therefore be regarded as a total loss. The boat was owned by Captain Quinn and Robert Hicks, coal dealer, Cobourg.

Static Interference.

"Static," what it is and why it is, are known to all radio experts, but how to eliminate it is absolutely unknown. Monday in summer is the time of maximum radio efficiency, when static is at its worst. Tuesday in midwinter is the time of maximum radio efficiency, when static is practically unnoticed

To Prevent Goitre.

Goitre is an expression of deficiency of iodine in the thyroid. Elaborate experiments made recently by Dr. O. P. Kimball on school children furnish evidence that administering a minute quantity of iodine every day acts as a preventive in such regions where goitre prevails.

VERY HIGHLY PRAISED

Toronto, July 28th, 1923.

The Chautauqua Committee :—

Dear Sirs :—We have your request that our talent reach Napanee in time for a two o'clock afternoon program. We have to-day sent a bulletin to all our talent and to our superintendent at Kingston advising them of this request and we believe there will be no difficulty about their reaching Napanee in ample time.

We are getting fine reports indeed of the success of the program. The writer was at Woodstock last night and saw the play. I have never seen a better satisfied Chautauqua audience than filled out of the tent after the program. The audience was so convulsed with humor of the closing scene they were hardly able to stand and sing God Save the King. The newspapers at Woodstock have been giving us very fine notices indeed, this has been true throughout the province and we feel sure that the people of Napanee are going to enjoy Chautauqua this year.

Very truly yours,
Dominion Redpath Chautauqua,
E B. PERSONS,
Manager.

STELLA.

Nearly all the farmers have finished haying and report a very good crop, but on account of the prolonged drought grain will be short and light in weight. Pastures are poor, potatoes, roots, etc., are seriously in need of rain.

The milk supply at the Stella cheese factory is rapidly diminishing.

DESERONTO.

Mr. Wm. Hatche's new cabin cruiser, "Mildred H." is now complete in every detail with exception of some supplementary fittings for the power system, which are being installed by Mr. E. Deline, of Card's Garage. Napanee. The craft has already been out on two or three trial trips and so far her performance has exceeded the expectation of her owner and her builder, Mr. Derwin Cole. The boat is fitted up both for comfort and convenience. Dimensions are approximately 38 feet by 9 feet beam. There are two cabins, one forward containing two berths and one aft containing four berths, all of the Pullman type which, while serving as sleepers at night, may be transformed into comfortable lounges and seats for use in the daytime. The larger cabin is supplied with a collapsible table for dining purposes and the boat contains several comfortable deck chairs. In addition "Mildred H." is equipped with a galley, amidship containing a cook stove, refrigerator and cupboards, a small storeroom forward and toilet arrangements complete with running water on deck and in the stern. Electric light is installed throughout. The power system is a 40 H.P. Sterling engine with self starter and can be controlled from the steering wheel on deck.

THE C.G.I.T. CAMP AT CONCECON LAKE

The C. G. I. T. girls from Picton, Consecon, Cressy and the T. W. C. T. U. girls from Picton and Napanee met at the most ideal camping ground in Prince Edward County for a week-of instruction and pleasure.

The camping grounds were on the south side of Lake Consecon, a beautiful lake about three miles long and one and a half wide, abounding in fish which made an excellent bathing spot for the girls. The sandy beach guarded by cedars and willows, made an artistic frontage for the grounds, which were about two blocks long and one block wide, with hills and hollows much in evidence, thus making the very best of natural drainage. Along the background was a well wooded steep hill, which made a picturesque backing to the white tents with their gay banners and flags.

In fact the drainage, good supply of well water, and sunshine were wonderful promoters of health, drawing people closer to God and nature.

The events of the day began at seven. The girls were given five minutes to get into bathing suits for the setting up exercises, preparatory to the regular morning dip. Breakfast followed, then the flag raising and salute, after which the morning watch was held. At the morning watch we had a woman, a prayer and a short Bible talk. The different tribes of girls now separated and studied the Life of Jesus. Jesus was made so human to the girls that they took Him as their Guide and Friend. No girl could take part, or enjoy the evening without feeling that they were in close relation to God.

The class for beginners in swimming followed Bible study and was ably conducted by Rev. Mr. Mellor.

The afternoon sports began after the half hour rest period and consisted of exciting hikes, nature study classes, first aid classes, story telling and land and sky sports as well as delightful picnic.

At seven in the evening there was always a baseball game. The Full of Pep Group or We Go Wild Tribe were the winners for the week. Camp fire hall games, the marvellous sunsets held the girls spell-bound and they again felt as if God were near.

Visitors began to arrive and the girls separated into tribes as Hiawatha, Nicawa, Ojibway, Mic-Mac, Keewaydin, We Go Wild and Y. W. C. T. U. girls or Agawaita. Each tribe had their Big Chief and Lady Chief and had a pow-wow around the camp fire. The visitors were perfectly delighted at seeing the tribes prowl around in the dark to come to the camp fire and present their tokens to the Great Chief, Miss Atkins, of Toronto, who always received a torch for lighting their separate camp fires. The girls sang their tribal sons and gave their tribal calls both of which were original.

Each night had a different performance and was just as instructive and entertaining as the night before. The day ended by reading the Noces-Noe News (the camp paper) singing Abide With Me and repeating the Indian prayer, Omaha, in true Indian style, then singing Taps and repeating in low key next door neighbor and saying, "Thanks for the day, comrade."

Monday morning the Y organizer entered camp. She exclaimed, "Isn't it wonderful to think that these girls are granted by the C. G. I. T. tents at each end of the campus.

Miss Duff gave the girls very useful instruction, also many new lines and the last day of camp an election was held. The girls showed by their ballot that they could exercise excellent citizenship as well as shining examples of womanhood.

All are looking forward to ten days of delightful comradeship next year at Consecon Lake.

LENNOX COUNTY COUNCIL COMMITTEES MEET

On Saturday, 28th July, Warden J. S. Sohnson convened the Finance ,Roads and Bridges and County Property Committees and they met at County Clerk's office and transacted several important matters of business. In the morning the Finance Committee opened 13 sealed tenders received by secretary R. W. Paul for $28,000.00, 5½ per cent. debentures maturing in ten equal annual installments, and awarded them to R. A. Daly & Co., Toronto, the highest tenderers, their offer being $100.59, or $165.20 over par. Chairman W. H. Milling having the debentures ready it was ordered that they be transferred to the Dominion Bank and delivered to the purchasers upon receipt of $28,165.20. Committee also considered the present insurance on county machinery, $18,500.00 and decided to cancel same, as machinery was only covered while in storage, and to place insurance on it in the fall at short date, 7 months while in storage, thus saving about $100.00 in premiums. County barn will be insured for $1000.00. During the afternoon the three committees were in joint conference, and besides disposing of a number of minor matters, dangerous conditions of level crossings and approaches at several places in the county on C. N. railway and C. P. railway was discussed, and the clerk was instructed to notify the head offices of these railways thereof, and demand immediate action in the matter. Chairman of County Property Committee, Thomas Neeley, was directed to have necessary repairs made to the roof of the court house, and he was given instructions in several matters. Members of Roads and Bridges Committee, D. E. Smith, and Reeve Hambly were appointed to act as deputy Mr. Neeley Rankin, Esq., M.L.A., for Frontenac, and wait on Minister of Highways concerning certain county road matters. The councillors expressed regret at the illness of W. D. Black, Esq., M.L.A., who is confined in Belleville general hospital.

"Treasury of Hidden Secrets."

A book called "The Treasury of Hidden Secrets," was written and printed by Jane Bell in London in 1653. The title page tells the readers that it is "The Treasury of Hidden Secrets," commonly called the Good Huswives' Closet of Provision for the Health of her Household, gathered out of sundry experiments, lately practiced by men of great knowledge, and now newly enlarged with divers physick heips, and knowledge of the names and disposition of diseases that most commonly happen to men and women.

"Not impertinent for every good huswife to use in her house, amongst her own family."

Miss Bell dedicates her book "to all women that love and profess the practice of good huswifery, as well as wives as maides."

After turning the pages of the book and deciphering the old English printing, one is rather in doubt whether it is a cook book for humans. It reads more like the recipes might be for the fairies.

Archbishops' Centenaries.

This is a year of interesting anniversaries for both Canterbury and York, so far as the records of archbishops are concerned. To jot them down in brief: It is just 1,000 years since Wulfhelm became the 21st Archbishop of Canterbury, and 800 since William de Corbeuil succeeded to the same high office. Sebastian, Archbishop of York, died just 900 years ago, and exactly 850 years ago Canterbury was made subject to the Northern See, so that while the Archbishop of York is now Primate of England, the Archbishop of Canterbury is Primate of all England.

The Man for the Job.

Mrs. Carlin was one of those little women who are always looking for something that will take up their husband's late time. "John," she said, "I wish you would mend the front-door lock." "U-can't-t!" replied John, quaking like an aspen leaf. "I've g-got t-the s-sinking ache." "Oh, well, then, I know the very thing; you can sift the ashes."

NAPANEE GIRL GUIDE CAMP

The Napanee Girl Guide Camp was held at Thompson's Point from July 14th to 21st. We are greatly indebted to the Scoutmaster and Scouts of the Napanee Troop, who very kindly allowed the Guides to take over their camping ground on the conclusion of their own camp, and very generously left a great deal of their equipment for our use.

The first step in taking Guides to camp is to secure a camping permit from the Canadian Camp Advisor of the Guides. A detailed account of the proposed camp must be submitted, telling the location of the camp, its distance from the nearest doctor and telephone, the number of intending campers, the date of the camp, the names of those in charge, the sanitary arrangements, the precautions taken to ensure safe boating and bathing, the purity of the water supply, etc. Sometimes a personal inspection by the Camp Advisor is made, but in our case this was not considered necessary before the permit was granted.

Ten Guides in charge of Miss Diana Miller, the Captain of the Guide Company, and Miss Herrington from Guide Headquarters arrived at the camp on the morning of July 14th, and took over from the three Scouts who had been left in charge when the Scout camp broke up a few days before. There was a great deal to be done in getting ourselves settled, choosing our tents, finding out from the Scouts where everything was kept, and unpacking our own kit. Before we knew where the time had flown, the Scouts had left and the day was over.

For further news of the camp, we have the Camp Log, which was written for the most part by the Guides themselves.

Saturday, July 14th.—We were not able to have a camp-fire because of the rain, so a meeting was held in the cottage, followed by a concert and dance, the orchestra for the latter consisting of kazoos, combs, mouth-organ, jazz-whistle, and drums. A triple and a large spoon make an excellent kettledrum.

The Guides divided themselves into two patrols, Bluebirds and Orioles,: made up as follows: Bluebirds, Madeline Stevens, leader; Dorothy Lucas, Muriel Garrison, Dorothy Richardson. Orioles, Rhoda Gough, leader; Grace McCabe, Helen Nelson, Edith Hodson.

Sunday, July 15th.—By the time the Captain was ready to blow the rising whistle, there was no one left to be roused. This does not mean that she overslept, but that the camp was moved to rest at the crack of dawn, perhaps for fear of missing something. It had been agreed that the patrols would take turns acting as cooks, so the Bluebirds led off with breakfast. After breakfast all the Guides paraded for flag-raising and prayers, the Bluebirds furnishing the colour-party. Miss Herrington paddled to Le Nid and bore back loot in the form of a base-ball and bat, and a can of fish worms. With the latter the Guides caught enough perch to give them a most delicious fish-side supper. In the evening we sat on the verandah of Mrs. Miller's cottage and sang songs ranging from "Onward Christian Soldiers" to the Girl Guide Song, and down to Alouette.

Monday, July 16th.— After breakfast, flag-raising, and prayers, we all went off to meet the Paride. Was it to meet Claire and Marjorie Thompson, or was it for the provisions, some of which have not yet arrived? Claire Thompson joined the Bluebirds, and Marjorie the Orioles.

The team play of both patrols in serving meals is much improved. We have not seen since what we witnessed yesterday, a whole patrol dashing off and falling to find the milk, which Miss Miller at last pointed out to them from the other side of the camp.

In the afternoon, while the Bluebirds went off to procure a row boat for the use of the camp, the Orioles fell to and cleaned the cottage. As soon as the floor downstairs was thoroughly scrubbed, no one was allowed to walk on it, and the unfortunate people at work upstairs had to stay at the window and shout, until whatever they needed was hoisted up to them. We thought they would have a chance to use their Oriole wings, but they were finally allowed to walk down.

Tuesday, July 17th.—Due to the Guides accepting the proposal urging the use of daylight saving time, there were many heavy sleepers, who finally roused a little before 6.30, the rising whistle having sounded at 7.30. The breakfast was prepared by the Bluebirds, and then came morning prayers, and the hoisting of the colours.

After straightening up the camp, a few Guides went off to the dock in a row-boat and canoe to welcome Dr. and Mrs. Myers to the vacant cottage on the Point. The Bluebirds claimed the honours for having the neatest tents, and the Orioles won fresh scrubbing laurels by operating on the floor of Mrs. Myers' cottage.

Four of the Guides had a motor ride to Adolphustown and procured ice cream for the others. Later, the other Guides left the camp in charge of Miss Herrington, and spent a very enjoyable evening at Mr. Lavack's farm-house.

Wednesday, July 18th.—Orioles got a very appetizing breakfast and then took charge of the morning colour ceremony. In a class for First Aid, Miss Miller went through the process of having a sore foot bandaged quite a number of times. Miss Herrington was the victim on several, the rough nurses, and her suffering was barely intolerable when she had bandages applied for broken collar-bone, several cut arteries, and a broken leg. After dinner the Orioles had a lesson in signalling. Several tried their tenderfoot and part of their second-class tests, and just before the colours were lowered in the evening, three of the Orioles were enrolled. An impromptu play completed the day's programme.

Thursday, July 19th.—The camp was roused by the voice of Miss Miller calling for action. The Guides, dressed in bathing suits, washed a pair of blankets each. Breakfast was served, and the girls who had had a lesson in swimming finally expelled the water from their lungs and were able to swim properly.

The camp was very glad to receive fresh supplies for the canteen. A visitor arrived to spend the day, Miss Lloyd, of Deseronto.

After supper we had a play by five of the girls, and after a very heavy day, we turned in early.

Friday, July 20th.—After prayers the Bluebirds walked to the dock and greeted Mr. Babcock with a most uncomplimentary chorus of groans merely because he had come to help us to break up camp, and his coming meant that we should have to go home next day. We were complimented on the neat appearance of our camp. The next hour saw a great deal of work done by the Guides. Seven tents were struck and neatly packed away. Dinner proved the most welcome meal of the week after this exertion. Packing up and moving into the little cottage was finally over, and a very sad group of guides bade Miss Miller goodbye.

The Guides tried the fire-lighting test for their second class and all succeeded. Some of the girls and officers followed laid by the Bluebirds, and are to be given credit for tracking.

In the evening a large camp-fire was lit in the sugar-bush, and we spent the evening singing songs, toasting marshmallows, and popping corn.

Saturday, July 21st.—Breakfast was prepared on a stove improvised by an ingenious Oriole from a regular stove and both born off on the Paride the day before. We had a great deal to do, to leave the cottage in shape and pack up everything that was left, but we managed to fit in an expedition to the dock to meet the boat, and a long swim. Then we saw that one of the Orioles really had learned to swim at the camp.

On our way home on the Paride, we showed the skipper that one thing Guides can do is tie knots. Thereupon we were shown some thrilling new knots and splices.

We don't know what our families thought of the very noisy, sunburned crowd that climbed off the boat at Napanee, but we hope they thought camp did us good, because we are already planning for next year's outing—and that is to be for two weeks, if we can manage it.

GET IT AT WALLACE'S

THE FIRST STEP TOWARDS THE CROP OF 1924

(Experimental Farms Note)

It may appear to be a little too early to begin thinking of next year's honey crop, but the successful bee-keeper knows that the success of next year's crop depends upon the preparations made for it and the time they are made. A successful season depends to a large extent upon good wintering. Good wintering depends upon three things, namely; colonies well filled with young bees, an abundance of wholesome stores, and adequate protection from the varying outside temperatures during the winter and early spring.

The first thing then is to get colonies well filled with young bees and to get them before the winter sets in; this means that we must have the bees produced between the months of July and October and in order to do this we must have a prolific queen in the hive during the months of August and September. The first step, therefore, in producing a crop of honey in 1924 is to see that every colony is headed with a good, prolific queen during the latter part of July or the first week in August. A good second year queen will often produce the required number of bees in the fall but she is very likely to get lost during the winter or fail the following spring. A young queen reared during the latter part of June or July is the most dependable for she is not only prolific during the fall but she is comparatively young and prolific the next spring, the two seasons of the year when brood production counts most.

Every bee-keeper should examine his colonies during the latter part of July and destroy all queens that show the least signs of failing, replacing them with young queens that are prolific. Old queens that are still producing a maximum amount of brood can be left and replaced later in the season by younger queens.

A good system of requeening the colonies is one that is combined with swarm control measures, that is, introducing the young queen at the same time treatment is applied to control swarming. During the main flow from clover, when swarming is most intense and the colonies have larvae in queen cups, remove the old queen from the hive and destroy all queen cells present. Nine days later again remove all queen cells and introduce a young laying queen. By this method the swarmming is controlled and the colonies are requeened at the right time. As the old queen is prolific and increase is desired a frame or two of emerging brood may be removed with her and placed in a new hive. This nucleus can be built up into a strong colony by fall when the old queen can be replaced by a young one.

Putting on Style.

Yens, of the lumber camp, returned only two days after leaving for an intended visit of a week with his folks. The camp cook, surprised, exclaimed: "Back so soon? Didn't the folks use you right?"

"Oh, folks ban gude," replied Yens, "but they put on too much styles. Dey even put pie wit knife instead of deir hand!"

Well-Known Reader to Be Heard Here at Coming Chautauqua

Everett Kemp, noted reader-entertainer, will be one of the enjoyable attractions at the coming Dominion Chautauqua. He is known for his outstanding ability both as an interpreter of an entire play or book and as a reader of shorter numbers. His reputation extends from coast to coast. Mr. Kemp's repertoire are included such favorites as "Sevenoaks," by J. G. Holland; "The Music Master," by Klein and "That Printer of Udell's" by Harold Bell Wright. A program of miscellaneous readings is also among Mr. Kemp's offerings.

EVERETT KEMP.

Whether in the presentation of an entire play, a reading of a well-known book, or a miscellaneous program Everett Kemp is always enthusiastically acclaimed.

"New India" Subject of Notable Lecture at Coming Chautauqua

The interesting subject of "The New India" will be discussed at the coming Dominion Chautauqua in an illuminating lecture by Bhaskar Pandurang Hivale, a native of India.

Mr. Hivale is a graduate of an Indian university and a post-graduate of Harvard. In India he was editor of Dnyanodoya, the second oldest Anglo-vernacular weekly published in Bombay. He knows India thoroughly and discusses his subject authoritatively.

BHASKAR HIVALE.

He is a Christian, as were his ancestors for three generations. He speaks with a slight foreign accent, but his English is fluent and understandable. He has the faculty of introducing a delightful vein of humor into his lectures.

"The New India" will be a distinctly notable lectur.

Longevity of Nutgrass Nuts.

There are tales of the sprouting of grass nuts in the United States that have been buried for 30 years. Government weed specialists believe they have an authentic case of such nuts being in the ground for eight years without losing their vitality. To settle the question four galvanized iron cans about two feet square and four feet deep, without bottoms, have been sunk into the soil at the Arlington farm near Washington, each can holding 250 pounds of soil well filled with the grass nuts, and each is covered tight. The cans will be opened, one by one, in 1923, 1926, 1931, and 1936, and if the nuts prove to be as tenacious of life as may be supposed, adequate means of extermination will be sought.

Cure for Corns.

A good plan to get rid of corns is to buy from a chemist some gutta percha tissue. Cut it into strips, and wind a piece round the corn, having first moistened it with olive oil. See that the edges of the tissue are as even as possible, and when you come to the end of the strip, wet the edge with spirits of turpentine. Press it down, and it will stick. Also, dip feather in turpentine, and touch all the edges to make them adhere. Leave this dressing on for two days, and when you remove it the corn should be quite easily got out. Be particular about the edges adhering, as the exclusion of the air is the main point to consider.

Tree Growth.

With the aid of a newly developed dendrograph, some remarkable features relating to the growth of trees was determined. These included such phenomena as actual daily shrinkage and expansion of trunk circumference, a restricted period of growth (not over three months' duration), and a non-rhythmic growth dependent solely on food supply, temperature and moisture. It was also found that the inchoate foliage and the elongation of branches also occur weeks before the trunks begin to enlarge.

THE SPIDER AT HOME.

Some Facts About the Familiar Fly Catcher.

"Once, when I was near a bank thickly dotted by spider habitations, a blue-bottle sent out loud S.O.S.," writes Fabre Fevrell in Chamber's Journal. "He had been tempted to settle on the delicate pink petals of a blackberry blossom, and his foot was entangled with silky thread.

"Madam Arachne, warned by the vibration, hastened to secure her dinner. Bert-like, she went twice her size; he was very angry and frightened, and at her approach he buzzed so furiously that she withdrew. Only for a moment, however. Then she once again advanced and touched her visitor with one of her eight legs, keeping herself well away from his fluttering wings. This apparently useless manoeuvre was repeated again and again. But it hid a deadly purpose. Under this light, almost caressing movement, the spider had woyed another silken thread, to bind her captive.

"With diabolic cunning, she wound his legs together, and suddenly drew the threads tight, so that he was thrown off his balance, and hung suspended from a strong elastic rope. The end was near. Standing on the rope, the spider reached down, and, scientifically as ever surgeon wielded knife, she plunged her poisoned fangs with precision in the back of the fly's neck. Twice she stabbed, and there were no more struggles. The fly swung idly like a hammock in the breeze. The spider paused, as if to take thought. The slaughtered insect was too huge to handle. With incredible rapidity, round the dead, silent thing was woven a shroud, by means of which it was then drawn to the hole, to be devoured at leisure.

"During summer Madam had set thereat her door, and has been occupied with the work of self-preservation. Judging from her bloated appearance, she has accomplished it very effectively. But other interests are now at hand, and however reluctantly her attention is diverted from the engrossing pastime of the chase, she must perforce turn to different business. An imperative call is made upon her by a visitor of her own kind. He will not be denied, in spite of the risk he runs. The Edwin who comes to woo this massive Angelina is of a lighter color, slight, and elegantly shaped, far more attractive to the eye than his prospective mate. But she gives no sign of being vanquished by the arts and wiles of Eros, and as her suitor tentatively pauses on the threshold, she makes a lunge at him, and engages him in a wrestling match.

"The 'urge' of the race impels this comparatively puny creature to tackle an opponent twice his weight. If he fails, his ferocious body-love will make a meal of him. If he succeeds, it is by using brute force and infinite patience. This Amazon of insects will submit to no blandishments. Edwin can attain his end only by keeping her down with a tight and single hold on her neck. And even then she may avenge herself for the indignity by gobbling him up before he can get away. Could there be a more convincing example of the psychoanalyst's contention that self-preservation is a less powerful motive than self-reproduction?

"Once I viewed an interrupted courting-scene. Startled by a falling leaf, the lovers relinquished their preliminary sparring-match and sprang asunder. Cautiously Edwin reconnoitred, found no traces of her suitor, and proceeded to regale herself on a last green fly while she disposed of her larder. Involuntarily the picture arose of a muscular maiden kicking her would-be lover out of doors, and then sealing herself at the window, gnawing a raw beefsteak while he looks dejectedly around the corner."

The Mastodon in Canada.

The discovery near London, Ont., of the skeleton of a mastodon with tusks eight feet long shows once more that Canada must have presented at one time a scene very different from that of historic times. Remains of these monsters have been found elsewhere, but the valley of the Red Deer river in Alberta is their greatest cemetery in North America. London is about 700 miles south of Red Deer river and nearly 1,500 miles east of it. Through this enormous territory, and probably also far beyond the bounds of it, roamed these and other monsters. The general opinion of geologists is that the mastodon became extinct in the Pleistocene age, the period before the advent of man upon earth, but many American authorities think it highly probable that the mastodon and man were contemporary for a short period on the North American continent. It belongs to the same family as the elephant, which has survived in Africa and in Asia. The buffalo once roamed over the central part of this continent in countless thousands, and everyone was familiar to men who are still living. What Canada looked like when it was inhabited by the mastodon must be left to conjecture, but that its habits were the same as those of the elephant, this country was no "Lady of the Snows."

Unemployed Ride Free.

The ministry of social welfare in Czechoslovakia has concluded an agreement with the ministry of railways whereby workers for whom work in another district has been found through the medium of a public employment exchange will have their fare paid to the place where they are to work. The return journey will also be paid if the unemployed person in question is not accepted by the employer. The cost of transport will be defrayed by the ministry of social welfare, according to information received by the International Labor Office News Service.

Over a thousand million fish eggs of various species were collected by the hatcheries staff of the Department of Marine and Fisheries during 1921.

Inbound ships from the United Kingdom are averaging 4,500 tons of freight for discharge at Vancouver. Outbound they take about 4,000 tons per vessel. Last year the average outward tonnage was practically the same while the inbound was only about one tenth of what it now is.

Announcement has been made that a Government wireless station is to be erected on St. Paul's Island, which stands in the entrance to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, off the most north-easterly point of Nova Scotia. Two Government wireless engineers have arrived there and are making arrangements for the erection of the station.

One hundred and forty thousand Canadian school boys have been banded into an army of guards to watch for and prevent forest fires in the Dominion this year, according to an announcement made by the Canadian Forestry Association. The new organization, which is styled as the Young Canadians' Forest League, will, it is expected, save several million dollars' worth of timber from fire ravages.

That "prospects for increased immigration into Canada are excellent" was one of the most important statements made by E. W. Beatty, K.C., upon his return from an extended tour of England and European capitals. The president of the Canadian Pacific Railway believes Canada is progressing in the matter of immigration, but intensified efforts are essential, he considers, to offset erroneous impressions abroad that Canada does not require new settlers.

A record run between Winnipeg and Quebec was recently made by a special Canadian Pacific train when passengers from the Orient were, through a sudden landslide, in danger of missing their connection with the C.P.S.S. "Empress of Scotland" at the sea-board terminal. The train covered the 1,579 miles in a little over 36 hours, whereas the schedule time for trains between these two cities is 63 hours. The passengers had crossed the Pacific on the C.P.S.S. "Empress of Russia" and were taking advantage of the 21 day Trans-Europe service of the Company.

The United States has invested in Canada $2,500,000,000, according to the Bankers' Trust Company of New York, which has just completed a survey of this country and the amount of United States capital invested. Of the total sum invested, $1,200,000,000 is in bonds, and the remainder in stocks, mortgages, small businesses, industrial enterprises, banking and private loans. Two hundred manufacturing plants and 200 branch factories were opened in Canada by United States concerns in 1919, and a great number in 1920 and 1921, and that late in 1922 the number of these came to 700.

A collie dog is reported to have saved the life of a London West girl, while accompanying the child to a nearby school. On the way she stopped on the C. P. R. railroad tracks in the path of a westbound flier. Realizing the child's peril, the dog threw himself against her with sufficient impact to knock her clear of danger, and was cut to pieces by the train before he could regain safety.

The girl's mother tried to discourage the dog from going when the daughter started for the story, but he went, and was the means of saving the child's life, and died heroically as a result.

PERE MARQUETTE.

An Historic Anniversary Will Be Celebrated

Though a little town in Wisconsin, Prairie du Chien is specially celebrating the event. Canadians will feel an interest in the 250th anniversary of the discovery of the Mississippi river by Pere Marquette, Louis Joliet-and five other Frenchmen. The expedition left Green Bay North by Fontenac and Talon, the Governor and the Intendant of New France, and Marquette, by his mission and his explorations, has played an important part in that period of the history of what is now Canada.

Marquette was born in the north of France, in 1637, of an old and honorable family, and, joining the Jesuits, he was sent to Canada in 1666. At first he was stationed at Tadousac, still one of the most interesting and primitive of St. Lawrence ports, but two years later he was sent to the Upper Lakes, being for a time at what is now Sault Ste. Marie, a gathering place for the Indians, because the rapids were full of whitefish. Hearing of the great river to the south, the party set out to find the Father of Waters, and explored it as far south as the Arkansas.

"On the 17th of June," writes Parkman, 'they saw on their right the broad meadows, bounded in the distance by rugged hills, where now stand the town and port of Prairie du Chien. Before them the wide and rapid current coursed athwart their way, by the foot of lofty heights wrapt thick in forests. They had found what they sought, and 'with a joy,' writes Marquette, 'which I cannot express' they steered forth their canoes on the eddies of the Mississippi.'"

It was a perilous journey down the Mississippi, the dreaded Sioux tribe of Indians, sometimes hostile, sometimes friendly, a journey which terminated on the 17th of July, when they turned back northward to ascend overtook Marquette, and he died near the shores of Lake Michigan in 1676, and was buried at St. Ignace, on Mackinaw Island.

Marquette was dowered with the qualities to endure sacrifices. The longings of a sensitive heart, divorced from earth, sought solace in "the skies," says Parkman. "A subtle element of romance was blended with the fervor of his worship, and hung like an illumined cloud over the harsh and hard realities of his daily lot. Kindled by the smile of his celestial mistress, his gentle and noble nature knew no fear. Ever prone he burned to dare and to suffer, discover new lands and conquer new realms to her sway."

Diplomat's Wife Tells Stories

The ceremonial form of Chinese conversation is very amusing. Here is an example given in "The Indiscretions of Lady Susan" by Lady Susan Townley, whose husband was at one time attached to the British Legation in Peking:—

Q.: "Distinguished and aged sir, what is your honorable age?" A.: "Alas, honorable lady, I have wasted fifty years."

Q.: "How many worthy young gentlemen sons have you?" A.: "My fate is beggarly; I have but one little boy."

Q.: "How is your excellency's fair-eyed wife?" A.: "Thank you, madam! The foolish one of the family is well."

When alluding to himself in conversation, though it may go against the grain, Chinese ideas of politeness require that a man should make use of such expressions as the above, and speaking of his family he is bound to qualify them as "little," "mean," "stupid," or "ignorant."

Lady Townley was once initiated into the mysteries of Chinese foot binding. It was done with narrow bandages, and the feet, when bound, which were applied as hot as the tiny feet could bear them and tightly rolled. In drying, the bandages became permanent, so that all possibility of growth was excluded. "I have often seen a girl at play with her brothers," the author records, "upon a par with the others in her pastime, no unstable was her centre of gravity."

In China, before the republic, women and children were not to be considered by the emperor—whom the authoress met many times—that even the change from winter to summer was made by royal proclamation, and on a date which depended upon the state of the weather.

Sir Walter Townley was also at one time a member of the corps diplomatique at Lisbon. The Russian Minister there was Count Meyendorff, of whom a good story is told.

When a young man he was sent by his chief with despatches to be delivered personally to Prince Gortchakoff, Russian Foreign but majestic statesman who, as Foreign Minister, was the terror of all who worked under him. On taking leave of the great man, Meyendorff asked him if he wished any special message conveyed back to his chief.

"Tell him my story is told."

"Well, I may not be beheld the lion in his lair," said the other in his most terrible voice.

"Right," answered the irrepressible youth, "but to resist a joke. "I'll tell him I've seen the brute!" a pleasantry which it is said cost him his subsequent advancement in the service.

A royal footman who, according to Lady Susan, was destined to attract attention, if not to make history, was a man named Sykes, who was in the service of William IV. The king used to visit Lord Albermarle, who held a position in the king's household. On one night His Majesty proposed somebody's health.

Sykes, unmindful of the tell-tale mirror before which he stood, took advantage of the king's toast to toss off a tumbler of claret behind the screen.

Unfortunately the king caught sight of his reflection, and next day told Albemarle that as others had seen it also he had better get the man out of sight for a time until the affair had been forgotten. So Lord Albemarle sent him as gamekeeper to a remote lodge in Windsor Park.

Another incident occurred in which this man figured. A party of North American Indian chiefs came to England, and, being desirous of seeing the King, travelled for the express purpose to Windsor. The first person they fell in with outside the castle was Sykes, in scarlet coat and huge gold epaulettes.

The Indians, of course, came to the conclusion that he must be their "Great White Father," and forming a circle round him they treated the astonished flunkey to their best war dance.

In Italy, of which country the authoress and her husband also had official experience, it is the custom that on the sovereign dies for the suite of apartments in the Quirinal to be closed for a certain number of years out of respect for his memory. In this way it happens that a great part of the palace is now closed owing to the deaths of Kings Victor Emmanuel II. and Humbert.

In Persia beggars adopt a patron, and thus it was that when Lady Susan arrived she found an old man had "attached" himself to her garden, having brought his carpets, water-bottle, and beggar's bowl—as if he intended making himself a "permanency." At last a torpedo-like of the sun so threw him off his balance that he fled!

Nobody Overworked.

Prof. William Palmer Wynne of England announces his discovery, arrived at through years of study and practice among the human species, that no person ever gets tired out of overwork. On the contrary, this student of the vagaries of the human mind and nervous system says, as we are told by the Los Angeles Times, that most people suffer from not having enough work to do. What a blow to all our preconceived ideas! Who has not at some time in his career indulged in a magnificent debauch of self-pity because of the heavy burdens placed on his bending shoulders and moaning back? And if this idea becomes widely prevalent how it will revolutionize our daily life. The chief excuse for surliness having been removed, people will have to invent some of their company smiles for home use, and life will be as rosy and gay as youth dreams it is.

The Penitentiary Library.

In the library at Portsmouth penitentiary, Kingston, Ont., there are 11,819 volumes, including, 4,325 magazines, 2,159 fiction, 2,297 educational, 634 history, 117 biography, 277 French, 49 Italian, 75 natural history, as well as books on agriculture, botany, chemistry, mining and other technical subjects. The library is indexed and handled on the regular card system. Each inmate is allowed to have one book at a time, as well as books necessary to any special course he may be studying. He makes out a list of the books he wishes in order of preference and is given them, one at a time, as they are available. His reading is done in his cell during the noon hour and in the evenings between six and nine.

BRIDES MUST WEEP

Curious Whitsuntide Custom Still Exists in England.

In the North of England Whitsuntide is a great time for weddings, and some curious superstitions still linger round the wedding ceremony.

No matter how happy a bride may be, she must shed some tears on her wedding day, or, so the superstitious say, she can never expect to be anything but miserable.

She must always ride to church with her back to the driver. She will, if she rides in the back seat, always occupy second place in her husband's affections.

She must on no account touch a duster or any cleaning rag on her wedding day, or she will be a domestic drudge all her life.

In the old days, at Whitsun, Englishmen tried to raise funds for the church by sale of Whitsun or church ale. Another custom, which fell into abeyance in 1879, was the distribution of bread and cheese.

The food was cut into little squares, brought in baskets to the church, and on the conclusion of the afternoon service thrown all over the building to be scrambled for. Many years went by the scramble was transferred to the churchyard, and then beyond the churchyard gates; but quite an ordinary sight at Whitsun was to see parishioners struggling in the roadway for the food.

For many years, at a village in Devon, a lamb, draped with garlands, was carried round the parish on Whit-Monday while money was collected from passers-by. On Tuesday the lamb was killed and roasted whole in the middle of the village, slices of the roast being sold cheaply to the poor.

This custom was rooted in a local tradition. Once the neighborhood suffered from drought, and when the people prayed a spring of water, it is said, appeared in an adjoining field. As a thanksoffering a lamb was sacrificed by the people.

A Twin Egg.

The hatching of thirteen chickens from twelve eggs was a feat accomplished recently by an Oakville, Ont., hen, thereby rivaling the exploit at Milverton, Ont., recorded on June 20th, whereby 34 ducklings emerged from 33 ducks' eggs.

Mrs. Paget, of Maple avenue, Oakville, bought a setting of thirteen eggs from Charles Naylor, of Oakville. Mrs. Paget undertook to have the eggs conveyed to the home of her sister-in-law, Miss N. Paget, on Dundas street, Oakville, about a mile away. One of the eggs was broken in transit, leaving the dozen, one of which produced twin chicks.

A National Group.

Sir Louis Davies, Chief Justice of Canada; Sir William Judith, Chief Justice of Ontario; Hon. Eugene Lafontaine, Chief Justice of Quebec, and Hon. Benjamin Russell, Judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, have been appointed by the Government a "national group" for the purpose of nominating candidates from whom a member to represent Canada on the Permanent Court of International Justice under the League of Nations may be elected.

Woman Journalist Denies That She Betrayed Friend To the Russian Government

Mrs. Stan. Harding, the newspaper woman who was imprisoned for several months on the charge of being a spy, will be indemnified by the Russian Government if the British Government will do the same for Russian subjects damaged by British acts. This is one of the interesting items in the Russian note sent to Great Britain a few weeks ago. Mrs. Harding went to Russia as a correspondent of the New York World, was arrested and thrown into prison, where she suffered dreadful hardships. On her release Mrs. Harding publicly charged an American newspaper correspondent, Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison, with having denounced her to the Russian police. Mrs. Harrison was the correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, the New York Evening Post and the Associated Press, all of which were keenly interested in the charges made against her. The National Union of Journalists in Great Britain supported Mrs. Harding in her effort to collect damages not only from the Russian Government, but from the United States Government, on the ground that her misfortunes were the result of treachery on the part of an American citizen.

Mr. Hamilton Fyfe, of the American Editor and Publisher, Mrs. Harrison for the first time attempts to answer the charges made against her several months ago by Mrs. Harding. She says that she had heard of the charges soon after they were made, but that reasons made it impossible for her to answer immediately. These reasons no longer exist, and she replies to Mrs. Harding. Of her reply, we must say that its distinguishing feature is her failure to attack Mrs. Harding in turn, something unparalleled, we believe, in a controversy of the kind. Whether her denial is to be accepted, however, is another matter, and since the other side of the question says that Mrs. Harding was accused by Mrs. Harrison, it would appear that the latter lady has some more explanations coming. However, her rebuttal is worth publishing. Mrs. Harrison says that she first became acquainted with Mrs. Harding in Berlin in 1919, where they were both employed as correspondents, and where both were sending to their respective Governments confidential reports of conditions in Germany.

After the armistice the two ladies lived together at the Hotel Adlon, and Mrs. Harding, who was the wife of a German, was extremely useful to her fellow journalist in introducing her to important people and providing her with news. Mrs. Harding, being widely acquainted in the City, Mrs. Harding returned to London and Mrs. Harding went back to the United States, later on leaving for Russia. She supposed that Mrs. Harding had carried out her intention of securing a divorce from her husband and thus becoming a British subject again, after which she was to open a business in London. Mrs. Harrison was not long in Russia when she was arrested, and it was obvious to her that the information against her had come from Germany. The Russians knew that she had acted as an American spy there and they feared she had come to Russia to spy, a suspicion which was no doubt well grounded. She was released on parole, and then appears to have entered into a contract of wife with the Russian officials, intimating to them that she might send colored reports to the United States on certain conditions, but announcing so that she did not actually have to send them.

Thus she continued to fence when she learned that Mrs. Harding was coming to Russia. She was astonished and alarmed. She knew that what information the Soviet had against her, had also about Mrs. Harding and was certain that the latter would be immediately arrested on her arrival. There was a British correspondent then leaving Russia and by him she sent a message advising Mrs. Harding on no account to enter that country. This message was never delivered. Then she advised the Russian Foreign Office not to admit Mrs. Harding, but her protest was disregarded, and Mrs. Harding entered bearing the highest recommendations from Socialists in other countries. She was met at the frontier by an agent of the Cheka, and on her arrival was taken to the house in Moscow where Mrs. Harrison was staying.

Mrs. Harrison asserts that all the time she was in prison she sent her packages of food and was the only person to do so. She says that once in the course of her detention she was told that in the hall as she was leaving she would see Mrs. Harding, but was forbidden to give her any orders, believing that not to do so would subject both of them to unpleasantness. Of course, Mrs. Harding, not unnaturally, supposed that Mrs. Harrison by refusing to look at her was announcing the end of their friendship, and from this and other circumstances came to the conclusion that she had been betrayed. Mrs. Harrison makes rather a good point when she says that though she was in the United States from September, 1921, until June, 1922, Mrs. Harding never wrote to her or made any protest against her supposed treachery, and that her charges were not publicly hurled at us the when their object was on a long journey with no opportunity of making an immediate answer.

Immigration Grows.

Immigration is increasing. During the five months ending May, 39,411 immigrants entered Canada, or 41 per cent. more than for the corresponding five months of last year. Immigration from Great Britain alone during the last months named has increased by 50 per cent.

Immigration from the United States has been steadily growing during the last few months. In May alone 2,079 entered Canada from the United States, compared with only 642 in January of this year. There was also a decrease in immigration from the United States as compared with 1922 figures.

The recent recovery in this class of immigration is regarded by Immigration Department officials as an indication that the efflux across the international boundary is being curtailed.

Canada Faces the Future With Confidence

CANADIANS have always been noted for courage, optimism and faith in their country.

Canada was not built up by pessimists, nor will Canada continue to develop if her people allow themselves to become croakers and grouchers. Canada is fundamentally an agricultural country. We have a soil and climate which can grow the world's finest agricultural products.

Canadian farmers who have earned the capital invested in their farms out of profits in farming are numbered in thousands. These successful farmers have paid off their mortgages, stocked their barns and stables, bought their machinery, made a good living for and brought up their families. It meant hard work, but now they are independent.

Money in Mixed Farming

In recent years, at different points on the prairies, oats have been brought from 106 to 107 cents per bushel. For William price of 42c per bushel, while barley used for the same purpose has brought as high as 85c as against the For William price of 57c per bushel. Farmers marketing their coarse grains in this way lower marketing cost, have a sure market and make money on their grain, while at the same time they market their roughage, otherwise often wasted.

The cattle embargo is now off. There are worth more money and certain to make good money for the Canadian farmer from now on.

Money in Pigs

The Dominion Experimental Farms have proved by actual test that there is a profit in feeding pigs. Last year at the Central Farm, Ottawa, after paying for feed, labor, interest and depreciation, the net profit per pig was still $4.63.

Profits from Sheep

As money-makers, sheep are hard to beat. In every province from Prince Edward Island to British Columbia are found many flocks returning generous profits to their owners.

Poultry Pays

Poultry makes money for those who adopt modern methods, whether East or West. Little Prince Edward Island marketed its co-operatively in carlots, shipping annually upwards of one million dozen eggs. The British Columbia Co-operative Poultry Men's Exchange markets in the same way, thus saving ruinous glut in their local market.

There is a market for good Canadian horses, whether light or draught.

Grow Seed

Canada's Northern grown seed possesses extra vitality. There is a large market for it to the south. Canada exports seed potatoes, but imports other seeds. She has the opportunity to grow seeds for herself and for export.

The Future

Ten years from now the pessimists of today will have been forgotten. Britain has removed the embargo against our cattle. She wants our beef and bacon, our cheese, butter, eggs and apples, our wheat and flour. As the population of the United States increases, she will consume less and less against us on the British market. Eventually, she will herself be an importer of many other food stuffs besides wheat from this country.

Canada has the men, the climate, the land, the stock and the potential markets necessary for agricultural success. Let us farm with all the industry and science we can muster. Let's get to work and pay our debts. Canada is moving forward with confidence in its future. Let us keep going ahead.

Napanee Defeats Adolphustown.

The Napanee baseball team defeated the Adolphustown team at Adolphustown, Wednesday afternoon by the score of 8-2. Loucks pitched air-tight ball and shut Adolphustown out until the ninth innings, only one Adolphustown player reaching first base until the eighth inning. Stewart on 3rd for Napanee played real baseball and made three pretty hits. John McNeil and Carter also played excellent ball. "Bill" McLaughlin made several long drives, which were unfortunately foul balls. Ross Loucks held "Mac" up in fine style. Gallagher robbed Stewart of a three bagger when he raced back and speared a long drive. Prout, on short stop, for Adolphustown, played good ball.

Lake of Bays.

One of the loveliest summer wonderlands in all the Northland is Lake of Bays, entered via Huntsville, Ontario, just 146 miles north of Toronto. The thousand bays of which this lake may truly boast has each a thousand surprises and delights for the nature lover. Beyond this lake are other countless bodies of water on every side; at every turn they strike the view, each with its own peculiar beauty and inimitable charm. There is excellent boating, bathing and fishing; speckled trout, salmon trout and whitefish are plentiful. Fine, modern, summer hotels offer gay social life, golf, tennis, bowling, and all the water sports, while the entire district is dotted with smaller hotels and boarding houses. Canadian National trains connect with a flotilla of lake steamboats serving all the territory. Ask any agent of the Canadian National Railways for full information, literature, etc.

HOME OF BEDE.

Two Famous Historians Associated With Jarrow.

Two great minds—of types as widely different as can be well imagined—have been, in ancient and modern history, the masters of Jarrow.

For over a thousand years the world, when it heard of Jarrow, thought of Bede. It was the place where that great saint and scholar, "father of English history," had lived his strenuous life, and died his beautiful death—which, as described by the old chronicle with such sublime simplicity of diction, stands out, a cameo, in the mind of the most elementary student of English literature. Here, in his day and generation, Bede did a mighty work. Men marvelled at his learnings, and strangers came long distances into this corner of Northumbria to join the college of six hundred monks over which, while still a young man, he presided. "All that the world then knew of science, music, rhetoric, medicine, arithmetic, astronomy, and physics, were brought together by him." Besides his work as a schoolmaster he also did duties as a monk; yet he found time to write, it is said, a hundred and fifty books, one being his famous "Ecclesiastical History of the English Nation." All that we really know of the century and a half that follows the landing of Augustine we know from him.

England owes much indeed to the Sage of Jarrow, and has never ignored her debt. Though all the ups and downs that separate the eighth century from the twentieth one has paid unstinted honor to his name. And that name has shed a reflected lustre upon Jarrow, though pilgrims coming thither needs must reconstruct the past, in their mind's eye, without much outward help. The light which Bede so well and truly tended has spread far and wide; but the sconce which then upheld it has crumbled into decay. All that remains of the monastery—once far-famed as a seat of light and learning—consists of scanty fragments of two walls, on the brow of the slight hill overlooking Jarrow Slake, which, prior to its reclamation, was an estuary of the Tyne, about five hundred acres in extent. Beside the ruin stands St. Paul's Church, an old building much rebuilt; and Jarrow, overlooked by these, lay, in the middle of last century, a little village, living on the memory of its past. It had no streets, nor numbers to the houses; and its link with the outer world was a primitive "branch railway" line from Brockley Whins, up the incline of which an old gray horse drew the single carriage which sufficed for local traffic.

Then on the scene came Charles Mark Palmer, one of the foremost pioneers of modern industry; and by a stroke of enterprise endowed Jarrow with "a Present." Up sprang a town, humming like some gigantic hive; its "honey" those rich stores of coal and iron which, in Bede's day and for long after, lay as undreamed-of buried treasure all about the banks of a clear-flowing, silvery Tyne.

Cheated of Just Reward.

It seems always to have been true that a pioneer of any invention which is in advance to become indispensable must suffer misfortune, and perhaps even perish, before his creation can win the recognition it deserves.

This was the case with the steel loom for knitting stockings, invented in the sixteenth century by William Lee.

Lee took his invention to Queen Elizabeth, but she withheld her patronage. Again he improved his machine, so that it would knit silk stockings—the queen's love of silk hosiery had been one of her chief reasons for disinterest—but again he was disappointed at not receiving a royal grant.

Things were no better under James I., so he went to France, and when success was almost within his grasp at the French court the assassination of the king balked him again. Broken-hearted, he died, but in the next century Oliver Cromwell granted a patent on his device to the company of Framework Knitters.

ROBBERS' CAR FOUND.

First Clue Discovered In Daring Robbery Case.

TORONTO, July 20.—One definite step toward the solving of the $82,000 bank robbery mystery, which had its inception when six desperadoes held up fourteen bank messengers at Jordan and Melinda streets, on Tuesday morning, came last night, when headquarters police recovered the big Studebaker Six car used by the gang from an isolated barn on the Dunlop Farm, about ten miles northeast of the city limits. The car was found by W. R. Sexton, 114 Grenadier road, while he and two friends were out for a stroll on Sunday evening. The Dunlop farm is situated on the Don Mills road. Examination of the car revealed two of the stolen bags, one of which was bloodstained on the inside, indicating that one of the robbers was wounded in the fight. The bags also contained a large number of bank cheques, all from the Sterling Bank and the Bank of Nova Scotia. The car, which bears the license number "38-107," is a maroon or wine color about the body, with black mudguards, which no doubt accounts for the conflicting reports regarding its color by eye-witnesses of the holdup. On the left-hand side of the car, at the rear and a few inches above the gasoline tank is an indentation, made by a bullet, and one of the glass lights in the back of the cover is gone. That the car was particularly noted on the day of the robbery is evident by the fact that it bears the several peculiarities reported to the police, on which the description, flashed broadcast, was based. It has a broken glass in the rear lamp, a strip of paint off the left-hand front door, has a torn side curtain off left-hand front side, and is minus a handle on the left-hand rear door.

The interior of the car was littered with old papers and the strings and seals cut from the cotton bags in which the cash was contained. The front and rear license plates were tied in place with bits of tape, and as the original number of the car at the time it left the scene of the crime was "26-826," it indicates that the plates were changed while the robbers were in flight.

RESCUED HER SISTER.

Brave Young Woman Died as Result of Effort.

WIARTON, Ont., July 30.—Under peculiarly distressing circumstances Winifred Alison Campbell, aged 23, eldest daughter of Rev. and Mrs. D. B. Campbell, of Brantford, was drowned at Oliphant on Saturday afternoon. Winifred and her sister Florence were bathing together at Lonely Island when Florence, who could not swim, got out of her depth. Winifred, who was an expert swimmer went to her assistance and brought her in safety to a boat, into which she was lifted and taken to the shore, which was only a few yards distance, Winifred remaining in the water.

The girl's mother, who is a doctor, attended to Florence and in the excitement the moment it was not noticed that Winifred was missing. When her absence was noted it was found that her body was in the water, the unfortunate girl having succumbed to heart failure consequent on her effort in rescuing her sister. The party had been camping at Oliphant since Monday.

Ministry In Newfoundland.

Gallant by a majority of 34. This will make the standing of the parties: Conservatives, 25; Liberals, 5.

Story of Rabbit Pie.

In the course of his new wireless sketch, Harry Tate, the comedian, lets off a regular machine-gun fusilade of stories.

One of the best concerns a man who sold what he alleged to be rabbit pies.

Pressed by an irate customer, who found something amiss with their flavor, as to whether the pies were really and truly what they purported to be, the man admitted that they contained "a small admixture of horseflesh."

Further pressed to say what proportion of each, he replied:

"Oh just fifty-fifty—one horse one rabbit."

Colored Highways

In England the suggestion has been made that the public highways be colored by means of some cheap chemical spray, which would make them less tiring to the eyes of motor drivers.

EARL BEATTY IS ANGRY

May Resign From Post of First British Sea Lord.

Wants Admiralty to Be Given Control of Naval Air Force—Controversy Is Causing Trouble In Politics and It Has Now Spread to the War Office.

LONDON, July 30.—Further conference has failed to mollify the Sea Lords, who are demanding that the Admiralty shall be given complete control of the naval wing of the air service. Earl Beatty is leading the revolt against the decision of the Imperial Defence Board that the present system of one-force shall be maintained. It is claimed that the unification of this, the youngest, force, is merely temporary and is designed only to allow of its upbuilding following the war. The Sea Lords declare that efficiency is impossible unless this branch of the force is developed through the navy, with the resulting understanding of naval strategy, tactics, customs, traditions and discipline.

The controversy has spread to the War Office, where the general staff demands control of the army branch of the force, but this position is not serious compared with that existing at the Admiralty, where it is freely stated, if opposed on this question, Lord Beatty and others will resign. It is anticipated that the Premier Ministers will announce the decision of the Cabinet in the House of Commons next week, when it is probable that the recommendations of the Imperial Defence Board will be upheld.

There was acute tension in the matter during the early days of the present session of Parliament, when Bonar Law, then Premier, announced that the question would be referred to the committee of Imperial Defence, whose decision, it was understood, the Admiralty had agreed to accept.

This committee has reported, and although it has not been publicly issued, it is believed to be averse to the claims of the Admiralty and that it proposes to relieve the situation by a compromise which would admit certain naval officers to the Air Ministry.

WOULD BE ACT OF WAR.

Ottawa Officials Do Not Think Wrangel Will Be Seized.

OTTAWA, July 30.—Officials of the National Defence and Naval Departments refused to give serious consideration to a despatch from Nome, Alaska, to the effect that the Siberian government was fitting out an expedition at Vladivostok, to wrest Wrangel Island from the party of British explorers now in possession of it.

In the Nome despatch it was stated that the Russian expedition was prepared to capture Alan Crawford, of Toronto, and Fitzhugh Green, who are holding the island in the name of Great Britain. This, officials of the National Defence Department claimed, would be equivalent to an act of war.

They did not believe that the Siberian Government, even if it did contemplate sending a vessel to the island would interfere with the party now in possession of it.

That at least should be sent to the island upon a peaceful mission by the Siberian Government, officials of the National Defence Department declared impossible. But they did not believe that any arbitrary steps would be taken to enforce Russia's claims to the island pending the outcome of the consultation between Vihjalmur Stefansson, the explorer, and the British Government, in regard to the ownership of Wrangel.

MUST AVERT TIE-UP.

Americans Are Strongly Against Another Coal Famine.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—The attention of both the operators and the miners to the great responsibility involved in the precipitation of a strike in the anthracite coal industry was called Saturday by the United States Coal Commission through its chairman, John Hays Hammond.

Although without authority to act in the matter, the commission has decided to exercise the right of speaking for the public in view of the impasse between the miners and operators. Members of the commission are frankly alarmed by the situation, and, in the absence of the President, have decided to marshal public opinion to force a settlement, Chairman Hammond, explaining the policy of the commission, expressed confidence that a satisfactory result will be reached.

"I cannot believe," he said, "that either party to this controversy will be willing to undertake the grave responsibility to the public involved in bringing about a strike."

If this optimistic viewpoint should be dissipated by events, the commission plans to write a letter to both miners and operators, making this view-point more pointed. The letter would voice the right of the public to be heard in the controversy and to be spared the distress involved in further stoppage of coal production.

Forcible operation of the mines by the Government if another coal crisis occurs was advocated by Representative McLaughlin.

Lineman Electrocuted.

GALT, Ont., July 30.—The first fatality in connection with the local hydro system since its introduction here, in 1886, occurred Saturday, when William McKeel, aged 21, a local Hydro lineman, was electrocuted on Cambridge street, while stringing new wires, receiving a shock of 13,200 volts.

When he went to the top of the pole among the high voltage wires will never be known. His work was on a lower arm and he knew the top wires were live. He was assisted by fellow linemen on the next pole with an arm around the high voltage wire and then to fall into the wire below. The current throughout the city had to be shut off, while linemen with rope and tackle lowered the body, and while doctors and Hydro men used resuscitation methods on the body for three hours, they failed to restore life.

Deceased was an experienced lineman, having been engaged at the work for five years.

Tries Hunger Strike.

MILTON, Ont., July 30.—W. J. Brown, alias Bryce, alias Bran, alias Hall, awaiting trial at the Assizes on September 25 on charges of escaping from the Ontario Reformatory at Guelph on February 2, and afterward stealing $500 in Oakville, has been on a week's hunger strike in his cell, here, where every precaution is being taken to prevent him from escaping. The prisoner had not eaten anything since Monday last until Sunday.

Brown is the second prisoner who has tried the hunger-strike game since Governor McGibbon was appointed jailer. The first striker, like Brown, changed his mind and decided to eat after existing several days on an empty stomach.

The authorities say Brown's hunger strike was a trick to gain his freedom. Food was brought to him as usual, and he could eat or starve at will. He had his choice, and Governor McGibbon was not worrying.

The $22,500,000 Canadian National Railway issue reported oversubscribed.

Byng's Welcome to Harding.

OTTAWA, July 30.—The following telegram was sent by his Excellency the Governor-General to the President of the United States on his arrival in Canada:

"On behalf of the Government and people of the Dominion, I desire to welcome you, Mr. President, on this unique occasion of your visit to Canadian soil. I can only regret that a long-standing engagement debars me through the eastern provinces prevents me from giving you this sincere welcome in person.

"(Signed) BYNG OF VIMY."

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, July 30.—A substantial decrease in the receipts of cattle at the Union Stock Yards last week compared with the week previous was the salvation of the market, as, in view of prevailing conditions, a heavy run would inevitably have brought lower prices. Among the various factors having a bearing on the present situation may be mentioned the dullness of the export trade, the poor demand from the butchers and the poor quality of a large proportion of the offerings.

At the beginning of last week there were some 1,800 head left over, which added to the receipts of approximately 5,000 on Monday made about 6,800 to 6,900 animals on sale on the opening day of the week. Trading was only moderately active at prices steady with the previous week's close. Subsequently receipts for the rest of the week were not heavy and prices generally were unchanged.

During the week, with the exception of a few odd loads, there were few sales made as high as $7.50. The bulk of the best butchers were sold at $6.75 to $7.25.

Plain veal calves sold at $6 to $8, with thin and heavy at $4 to $5.

Light receipts of sheep and lambs brought about a recovery in this section of the market. The lamb trade opened on Monday at an advance of 50c, with the majority of sales at $12.50. Tuesday prices went higher at $12.75 to $13.50, and these values were maintained for the balance of the week. The sheep market was rather slow, with handyweights selling at $4.50 to $5 and a few springs up to $9.

Receipts of hogs were not heavy and prices for the most part remained steady at $8.87. Fed and watered for thick smooth and $9.70 for selects. Toward the close of the week prices became a little stronger.

Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards last night for to-day's market were: 106 cars—Cattle, 4,407; calves, 492; hogs, 1,565.

The New OVERLAND Blue Bird

Has won Immediate Public Favor

Never before in Canada has a car had such a reception. The Blue Bird has stepped into immediate popularity—and rightly.

For this new Overland is not only the most satisfying Overland ever produced—but we believe it represents value that nothing on wheels can approach.

Powered with the same motor that won such fame for the Overlands of last year, the new car is much roomier—with 106-inch wheel base and ample legroom.

The doors are full 23 inches in width, the seats are of the cushions deep; the appointments rich and complete in every detail; cord tires all round; barrel headlights. The ingenious Triplex Springs kill jolt, jounce and side sway.

Finished in the most beautiful and distinctive of shades, Blue Bird Blue.

HON. ERNEST LAPOINTE

BRILLIANT SPEAKER CAME TO FRONT VERY QUICKLY.

It Is Only a Little More Than Ten Years Since His Eloquence Attracted the Attention of the Canadian House of Commons, But He Has Enjoyed Many Distinctions Since Then.

On a dull day during the parliamentary session of the year 1912, arose in his place in the Canadian House of Commons a youthful French-Canadian member, to begin his painful confusion his first public utterance in the English tongue. Slowly and cautiously he spoke at first, gradually overcoming his nervousness as a surprised House bestirred itself in appreciation of his temerity.

Ideas long confined crowded his brain, and in the warmth of a new self-confidence he found them readily clothing themselves in a language not that of his fathers. Fired by the inspiration of the occasion, he burst the bonds of self-confidence, he gave free rein to his linguistic fancy; and when he sat down, amid the plaudits of Parliament, he had his reward.

That speech began the making of the young orator from the Province of Quebec. He came forward. Today he is the Honorable Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the Dominion Government, representative of Canada in the League of Nations, and still more recently in the limelight as the sole plenipotentiary of His Majesty for signing in Washington of a treaty with the United States.

The hesitant stammerer of 1912 has become the "silver tongue" of a British Parliament, the most polished and eloquent French-speaking orator of the New World. The unknown Canadian is he whose utterances at the great Geneva assembly drew from an Old World Frenchman, Senator Reynald, Director of the Bureau of External Affairs, the following rare tribute: "At Geneva, it was for us (native French) a ceremony of delight to hear the Canadian delegate, Hon. Mr. Lapointe, express himself in our language with a grace to which we but seldom attain."

During the eight years prior to that day on which he first ventured to speak in English, Ernest Lapointe had given ample demonstration of his ability because of his physical conformation than for his statesmanship; for there is a slant, with broad-back shoulders and a frame like that of a wrestler. He is more beloved for his sheer boyishness, his ready wit, and his conspicuous gaiety, than admired for his deeper qualities. But the plunge was made, the real man was revealed.

The member for Kamouraska mounted the rostrum more frequently. Practice made perfect, and it was perhaps inevitable that at the great convention of 1919 the Liberal party met to choose a successor to the departed Laurier—Ernest Lapointe should have been the one to wave the vast assembly with a passionate and eloquent appeal—in English, so that all might understand—an appeal for harmony in national life, for national and party ideals, for the submerging of racial misunderstandings and the triumph of broad-minded and conscious patriotism over partisan strife and sectional bias.

Then came, in 1921, the general election and the return to power of the Liberal party. Again the inevitable: Lapointe was called to the cabinet, christened "Honorable," and entrusted with the portfolio of Marine and Fisheries. In the fall of 1922, he went with Hon. W. S. Fielding to the League of Nations at Geneva, winning high place in the councils of international statesmen. He returned to Canada shortly after the New Year, and scarcely had unpacked his bags when he was summoned to Washington, there to sign on behalf of King George the Halibut Fisheries Treaty with the United States—the first such document affecting the two countries that had failed to carry the signature of the British Ambassador at Washington.

Honors sit lightly upon Ernest Lapointe. At the age of 46 he is still the "big boy" of Parliament. His friendly complaint, indeed, is that he does not take himself seriously enough, that affairs of state lie too lightly upon him. He must be still what he was when he first came to Parliament in 1904, the town-at torney of Fraserville—although long ago he will one day be, in all probability, the ablest constitutional lawyer in the House of Commons. He might be still the humblest rock-hewer in the Chaudiere mine-pits, lurking at "side," modest to the point of bashfulness, shunning the light of publicity. He is by no means a frequent contributor to debate but he is one of the best "listeners" in the House. Once on his feet, his oratory likes to travel over wide horizons, into the realms of external affairs, international relations and matters of broad national import.

Mr. Lapointe is referred to above as a French-Canadian. That might not please him. Himself the descendant of a French family that settled in Canada generations ago, he promises to-day no double label. He is Canadian. Canadianism is with him a passion; a vital fact; the confluence in one body and current of two great parent streams of national descent—British and French. It is to him something so far removed from the narrow Nationalism of Bourassa and Lavergne that in 1919, when the latter threatened to capture the seat in Quebec East—engendered vacant by the death of Lauzier—Lapointe he signed his own safe tenure in Kamouraska, threw the gauntlet in the face of Lavergne, denounced Nationalism, and carried the seat by a majority of 4,000.

Indian Billionaires.

Estimates of the total value of property owned by American Indians, made recently by the Department of the Interior, fixed the amount at $1,000,000,000. The figures include forest lands, mineral and oil rights, lands allotted and reserved, live stock and other property of Indians under the guardianship of the government.

Further statistics showed that $25,000,000 in the United States Treasury at the present time belongs to various tribes and that individual Indian funds to the extent of $25,000,000 are deposited in private banks in Western States.

HOWE AND DUELLING.

Canadian Patriot Had Narrow Escape From Death.

During Joseph Howe's strenuous battles against the magistrates "Sir Rogers" he incurred much enmity from the young bloods whose policy he sought to demolish. It is recalled by W. J. Healy in the Winnipeg Tribune that Howe was subjected to numerous challenges to fight a duel in defense of his honor. When Howe received a challenge from the hot-headed Justice Halliburton, on the ground that he had insulted the chief justice in a speech, he felt that he could not honorably refuse it. He felt, as Alexander Hamilton felt when he accepted the challenge of Aaron Burr to the duel in which Hamilton was killed, that on public grounds he had to accept the challenge of young Haliburton in order to vindicate his personal courage.

The duel was fought after breakfast, Haliburton fired first, and narrowly missed Howe, who then discharged his pistol in the air. When Howe went home to breakfast he was so silent his wife said: "One would think you had been at a funeral," little realizing how near to the truth she spoke. Many years afterward there was made public the letter which Howe wrote to his wife the day before the duel, and which is worth reproducing here because of the light it sheds on the man and his domestic relations:

"The painful alternative of risking my life has been forced upon me, very unnecessarily, as I conceive, but in a way and from a quarter that it may not be put aside. You know my sentiments on these matters and the view I take of all the obligations which my position imposes. If I fall, my will will secure to you and the children all the property, except the Pearl, (a schooner), keep up the Nova Scotian, pay my debts, and there will be a living for you all.

"I cannot trust myself to write what I feel. You had my boyish heart, and have shared my love and entire confidence up to this hour. Heaven and you only know the pure pleasures of the past—the future, for you and my dear babes, might well have been me, and would, did I not feel that without a protector you could better face the world than with one whose courage was suspected, and who was liable to continual insult which he could not resent. God in His infinite mercy, bless you. There shall be no blood on my hand. Yours till death."

In Quiet Petersham.

Many an English village has its link with Canada through the life or burial there of one who had much to do with the early days of this country. One of these is Petersham, where is buried Capt. George Vancouver, who sailed the coast of Burrard Inlet in 1792, and after whose big Pacific port is named. Petersham is on the fringe of London, but from its quiet, rustic simplicity it might be far distant.

"People in the nearby town of Richmond," writes Mabel Durham in the Vancouver Province, "tell how, when Capt. Vancouver, still young, but worn and weary from the great labors with which his life had been filled, came to the old Star and Garter Hotel there, he said: 'In all my travels I never slept eyes on a more lovely spot than this. Here would I live and here would I die.' He lived there only two weeks, and died there on May 10, just one hundred and twenty-five years ago.

"Whether old Petersham is the most aristocratic village in England, as some claim, matters very little to the visitor from overseas. But certainly it is one of the loveliest. It is hard to imagine a more pleasant walk anywhere than that down to it from Richmond through the pretty wooded lanes, past Petersham Wood, to the quaint little church whose history goes far back into the past, and has link after link of moral, old-world character and charm."

In the church is a tablet erected by the Hudson's Bay Company in 1841 to the memory of Capt. Vancouver, "whose valuable and enterprising voyage of discovery to the North Pacific ocean and round the world during twelve years of laborious survey added greatly to the geographical knowledge of his countrymen."

Improved Wind Turbine.

A Japanese has invented an ingenious wind turbine capable of utilizing air currents in the generation of power. When the velocity of the wind is eight meters a second, the model develops four horse power. Its equipment includes a storage battery by which the power to secure may be held in reserve to secure service when the wind subsides.

QUEEN VERY POPULAR

VICTORIA OF SPAIN BELOVED BY HER PEOPLE.

She Was Recently Attacked in a Sermon Delivered by a Priest to a Fashionable Congregation, But in Spite of Criticism She Has Gone Placidly on Her Way.

Undoubtedly the Roman Catholic Church is powerful in Spain, and perhaps in no other country would one find a priest making an attack from the pulpit upon the modesty of the queen. Yet this was the experience which Queen Victoria of Spain had a short time ago, when Father Calzamas decked his pulpit with photographs of fashionable ladies, including the queen, and declared: "These are shockingly decollete." His congregation is a fashionable one, and it is not likely that more than one of the ladies whose photographs he condemned were present. After the service there was a scandalized whispering among his hearers, and the priest was generally condemned for disrespect to the queen. Within a short time, the Madrid was discussing the affair. The newspapers took it up, and there was almost unanimous disapproval of the preacher's remarks. So newspaper republished the photo of the queen which had been criticized. There was a rush to buy copies, but the announcement was made that all had been sold. It is supposed that the edition had been suppressed by order of King Alfonso.

It is said that the King refused in person the court photographer who had taken the pictures of the queen and the ladies of the court, and had requested that the negatives be destroyed. An hour before the order was given a correspondent of the New York World went to the studio and obtained photographs which the World recently reproduced. After inspection we can report that there is no picture that might be expected to shock anybody but a monk. Some of them indeed would be classified as almost prudish on this continent. The matter was called before the Archbishop of Madrid and ordered to preach pending an inquiry, and the Minister of Justice took proceedings against him for lese majeste. The priest protested that he meant to give no offence to anybody, that his discourse had been misunderstood, and that all he had intended was a moral homily. Later the lese majeste proceedings were abandoned, at the instance, it is said, of the queen, who however may have been offended as a woman, is undoubtedly a loyal daughter of the church she entered shortly before her marriage.

Victoria is of Spain, we gather from the World correspondent, has not been a happy one. The queen therefore has been driven to find consolation in the ministrations of the church and the rearing of her six children. The eldest of these, the Prince of the Asturias, has always been delicate, and the newspapers say, Don Jaime, has been deaf from birth. There are two other boys and two girls. One of the latter, Cristina, shares her mother's love for horseback riding, and they are often seen together on the bridle paths. The queen has devoted herself to her children, having the domestic instincts of the English royal family even more strongly developed because of some of the trials and difficulties of her position.

Curiously enough this passion of motherhood goes hand in hand with a determination to perfect her reputation as the best dressed queen in Europe. When she was married she was by no means the fashionable looking woman she is to-day. Some of the Spanish noblewomen thought her even dowdy, and the hat she wore on her first public appearance in Spain gave serious offence to a Paris milliner suggesting that she should have worn her wedding cake as it had better lines. It was not long before a marked change came over the quality of the queen's wardrobe. She may have been dressing to please her beauty-loving husband, perhaps to please her own growing appreciation of the fascination of charming clothes, and for some years now she has been regarded as a model of fashion. Not only have changed her figure, have even improved it, a youthful sturdiness having given place to a slender grace, while her carriage and bearing and in appearance she is the type of the great lady. She has appreciated the fact that the garments add to feminine beauty, and it is said that in 1919 when she visited London she bought $100,000 worth of furs alone.

Queen Victoria has become popular in Spain, perhaps as popular as her husband, and that even is a reason why the ill-advised outbursts of Father Calzasaz has been so generally condemned. Her horror of the bull fights was known, but it seems to be growing. For a year ago she ceased to attend bull fights. Naturally her box would be the one to command the most gruesome view of the proceedings, but she has given all for some experiences resorted to smoked glasses, which make it possible for her to see nothing at all. She has repeatedly announced that she could not permit any of her children to attend the fights, however, and the Spanish people respect her for it. Nevertheless, she has given some of her way time and again to show her interest in football, and we learn that the game now threatens the bullfight in popular favor. Not long ago the great annual fair of Seville was opened for the first time in its history with a football game instead of a bullfight, and the queen, to celebrate her triumph, rode with fifty of her ladies on ponies from one end of the line to the other, dressed in Spanish costumes, and pelted with flowers by the cheering people.

It is estimated that more than half the people in the world dwell in Asia.

Serious Fire Losses.

Lumbermen have placed the monetary loss suffered so far in the destruction by forest fires which have burned over more than 250 square miles in New Brunswick, at not less than $15,000,000.

These figures were reached by a valuation basis on an average of twenty-five dollars to the acre on approximately 200,000 acres.

In addition there have been the losses in destruction of mills, houses, barns and various other buildings, as well as several highway bridges and crops in some settlements.

LLOYD GEORGE ON CANADA.

He Thinks That English Emigration Can be Stimulated.

Lloyd George is an optimist regarding British emigration to Canada. He sees nothing impossible in an organized movement of thousands of picked Britishers to settle on Canadian farm lands. "You need wide advertising in Britain and above all effective government organization in Canada," he told members of the Vancouver Board of Trade delegation recently. "You have lands, we have millions of surplus population, but what must be provided somehow, is the stimulus to induce or compel suitable persons to sever the ties that bind them to the crowded England, and take a chance with comparatively unknown conditions overseas," he said.

Lloyd George said he would certainly visit Canada next year. "I must go personally to say 'thank you' to Canada, for as wartime Prime Minister I saw those brave lads you sent us when we most needed them and I hoped this year to pay you that visit I owe my constituents."

Lloyd George thinks one hindrance to Canadian immigration is widespread misinformation. "Our people are frightened at the extreme loneliness of your western prairies," said the ex-premier, who sees in community settlement opportunity to avoid the overcrowding conditions in the cities to the detriment of building up the country districts. The Vancouver delegates say they have been impressed with the vast field open for the dissemination of information regarding Canadian possibilities. In every audience they found the small understanding of people well informed of Canada and it affairs. The London theatres, they found, were featuring plays with pastoral and almost pastoral scenes in Wyoming and Saskatchewan furnished most of the action, and Canadian pictures, which the delegates found greatly appreciated, showed the inhabitants of the Dominion hanging meat high in the trees to keep it away from the bears. Australia, they state, seems much more active in immigration matters than Canada. To get a widespread reaction from what Lloyd George called "Canada's great story" enough advertising of a comprehensive immigration policy was essential they considered.

Old Theatres.

The first attempt to found a theatre in Toronto, when it was "Little York," was made in 1820. In that year the ballroom of an hotel situated on the north side of King street, near Sherbourne street, was fitted up as a theatre, and dramatic productions were given there at intervals for a period of about three years. A so-called new theatre was then improvised from another ballroom which was known as Frank's Hotel, at the corner of Market Lane, north side of King street. The place got a sinister reputation in the year 1828, owing to a terrible tragedy that occurred there. A young man of good family, Charles French, had, it appears, made himself very unpopular with a certain political set by his spirited opposition to its propaganda. One night when French was leaving the theatre he was stopped by a man named Nolan, who had for reputation of being the "bully" for the political clique referred to. Nolan grossly insulted him and then, it was alleged, drew a pistol and fatally shot his antagonist. Nolan was tried for murder, found guilty, and sentenced to death. Notwithstanding numerous petitions for a reprieve, these were extensively circulated and signed, the executive council, at a special meeting before the date set for the execution, refused to grant a stay of judgment, and Francis was hanged on the spot at the corner of King and Toronto streets.

The next attempt in founding a theatre was made in 1842, when a large hall in the North American Hotel, at Scott and Front streets, was fitted up for the purpose. The first piece produced was "London Assurance," and the prices of seats ranged from 2s 6d to 7s 6d. The second "important" production was of the opera, "Guy Mannering." In 1843 the theatre was given a new name, and was henceforth styled "Theatre Royal."

Gen. Shaw.

Biographers of Brock give the name of Julie Shaw as the fiancee of Brock, daughter of Gen. Shaw, and it is also stated that Brock called on Miss Shaw as he left Niagara to ride to his last battle on Queenston Heights. The name of Gen. Shaw is well preserved in an important west end street, at Toronto, as well as in the memory of many Canadians. Prominent among the early pioneers of Upper Canada. Capt. Shaw's military service is memorable for his successful march with his division of the Queen's Rangers all the way from New Brunswick to Montreal on snowshoes in the depth of winter in 1792.

MOUNTAIN GRAVES.

Famous Men Sleep Under Wide and Starry Sky.

Cecil Rhodes, Stevenson and others are buried high above the world they enriched; but pagan people and the romantic natives of the South Seas and New Zealand, chose mountain burial places with similar appreciation for the isolated loneliness, the dignity and beauty which we find about hills and the greater peaks that, at night, wear the very stars in their hair.

Here in Canada, one of our most famous men, Alexander Graham Bell, of Brantford, the inventor of the telephone, sleeps his last sleep in a mountain grave in Nova Scotia.

In Capetown, in the tomb of Cecil Rhodes stands as an almost immortal symbol of the greatness of the distinguished man.

High upon the fragrant peak of Mount Vaea, in Samoa, Stevenson lies, within hearing of the great Pacific that moans and surges about the coral reefs.

Here, again, the Samoan natives, seeking to bury their "Tusitala" with the reverence with which they lived with him, carried the great body and forced a road to the summit, breaking through the undergrowth, and finally, after hours of unswerving labor, placed the body of Stevenson high above the tropical island where he made his home. And now the simple stone tomb, which I have seen in a full moon, while gale sweeping overhead, rests among the tropical trees which are drunk with blossoms in the given season.

New Zealand, with its network of rivers and pattern of hills, has many peaks which are sacred because of some departed pioneer who was buried high above the land he helped and enriched with his labor.

On One Tree Hill, in Auckland, you will find the grave of Sir Robert Logan Campbell, the father of Auckland. Curiously enough, One Tree Hill derives its name from a clump of four or five trees that shake their branches within a few yards of the lonely grave of the great Campbell. He was one of the men who "made" New Zealand, living from the cloud of native ignorance and sowing the first seeds of success in its virgin soil. And when he died they carried him up the hillside and buried him where his grave would look out over the country he had helped and enriched. I know another hill—Maranui Hill, in New Plymouth—where they buried Charles Armitage Brown —who went there some years after the poet died in Rome. This historic hill was on the thick of the Maori War, and, when it was barricaded in one campaign, the grave of Brown was lost. But a few months ago they found it again, and now it looks out over the sea that Brown had crossed in that distant day when New Zealand was in swaddling clothes.

On the mountains in the northern island of New Zealand—nine thousad feet above the sea—is a boiling lake. This steaming water is on the summit of Mount Ruapehu, and in the midst of everlasting snow, above the clouds, beyond sight or hearing of the world that whirls and hides below.

Here, in the shadowy yesterdays, before the white men came, the Maoris buried their chieftains, carrying their bodies up the steep path beyond mountainside and lowering them into the mysterious lake that steams and boils in the snow and ice at the edge. Mount Ruapehu stands in the centre of the island, and the quiet, undisturbed country from which it rises is dotted with remembrance. Ngauruhoe, a fiery volcano, stains the midnight skies within a few miles of Ruapehu. Great rivers trickle down from against Ruapehu's snowy bosom. And there, high above the world, on the sky-sweeping peak, the natives chose the burial-place of their chiefs as in the long ago when the moa strutted majestically across the plains of Aotearoa.

Even nowadays, when native womanliness has given against living respectable and uninteresting marble headstones, the Maoris choose hills for their graves and in and about Rotorua will be seen rudely fingered of stone pointing to the sky and telling you in gold letters that the great Chief is "at rest in peace."

A Beautiful Highway.

In connection with the opening of the Banff-Windermere highway, Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior, issued an invitation to the people of Canada.

"It is the hope of the Government," says Mr. Stewart, "that this highway will enable increasing thousands of Canadians to visit their own possessions—the national parks—and to enjoy the extraordinary opportunities for outdoor life, recreation and education which they afford."

The new road is the first highway across the Canadian Rockies. It will make accessible to motor travel an Alpine region hitherto almost unknown to the public, and will also provide a direct route from the prairies to the coast.

Henry Hudson.

Charles Barnard, an authority on the subject, says that the time and place of the birth of Henry Hudson appear to be lost. "We only know," he says, "that Hudson was old enough by the time he was forty, sufficient reputation as a bold and skillful navigator to be placed in command of the ship Half Moon of Amsterdam. Early in 1609 he made a contract with a party of Dutch merchants to act as captain of their private exploring expedition, and in the written agreement between them he was described as 'Henry Hudson, Englishman.'"

"Hobson's Choice."

A lifelike portrait of the quaint Cambridge carrier, Thomas Hobson, to whose we owe indirectly the phrase "Hobson's choice," has recently been acquired by the National Portrait Gallery. On the canvas appears the date 1629—two years before Hobson's death, at the age of 84, of Hobson. The painter is unknown, but he evidently belonged to a school with greater regard for fidelity than technique. How the famous saying arose is known. Hobson's stables were well stocked, but his horses had to be taken to customers in strict rotation. "This or none," was Hobson's rule. The portrait shows a strong face with acquiline, firm mouth, and kindly but courageous eyes.

Superstition and the Owl.

The owl, with its curdling cry, has always been regarded with superstition as a forerunner of calamity. The Indians shrink from the cry of the horned owl. Shakespeare refers to it as the bird of evil omen.

To Maintain Balance.

Canadian regulations for the emigration of young persons under the overseas settlement scheme provides that the Dominion's share of the grants for passage money shall be made for girls only up to 15 years of age and youths to 17 years of age.

It is understood that the British authorities are so impressed with the desirability of the sexes being emigrated in equal proportion that they have resolved to offer to provide a full grant for every additional girl who is between 15 and 17 years of age, the idea being to equalize the number of emigrants on both sides.

Owing to the interest displayed in the question of emigration to Canada in various parts of Northern Ireland, the Canadian Emigration Department is doubling its space in the Belfast office.

ROUP AND CHICKEN POX

These Contagious Diseases of Poultry May Be Cured.

Prompt Treatment Will Save the Birds—Can be Cured in Ten to Twenty Days—Not Communicable to Men or Other Animals.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

In the last few years the treatment of disease among poultry as received much study and many of the older ideas have been revised. Birds respond well to proper medicinal and hygienic treatment; in fact in many cases they show remarkable powers of reserve and resistance, thus comparing very favorably with other domesticated animals. The idea that it is useless to try and treat a sick fowl is erroneous.

Last winter the Ontario Veterinary College carried out a number of experiments regarding the treatment and cure of roup. These tests established the fact that in many cases the disease could be controlled and the birds returned to usefulness in from 10 to 20 days.

Roup a Contagious Disease.

Roup is a contagious disease that attacks the mouth, nasal passages, and eyes of fowl. The causative agent or germ has not yet been certainly demonstrated. The disease spreads rapidly through the flock, being favored by damp, cold, dark quarters, and for this reason roup is most prevalent during the winter months. The lesions in the mouth take the form of masses of yellow cheesy material which has a characteristic offensive odor. The nasal chambers and nostrils become plugged with exudates so that the bird is forced to breathe through the mouth, hence the bill remains open and breathing is often difficult. The eyes become inflamed and filled with a liquid discharge which later becomes thick and cheesy and completely fills the eye cavity. Often the whole side of the head is swollen and when both eyes are involved the bird is blind.

Treatment of the Disease.

The sick birds must be removed from the flock and placed in dry, light and moderately warm quarters. It is useless to try and carry out any treatment unless this is done. Give opening medicine such as epsom salts dissolved in the drinking water, about a quarter of a pound for every twenty-five birds; give for two days and repeat in a week. Catch each bird and proceed as follows: Remove all cheesy material from mouth and throat using a small pair of forceps or tweezers, scrape the sore places well. Don't be afraid of a little blood, but be sure and get down to healthy tissue. Dress and swab with a three per cent. solution of iodine; swab out well. If bird swallows a little of the solution it will do no harm. The nasal lesions should be treated by injecting a warm solution of boracic acid, about one teaspoonful to a quart of water. Use a small syringe to force solution up nostrils. The eyes should be treated with the boracic solution. Wash out the eyes well and open up the lids if they are stuck together. Sometimes the whole eye cavity is filled with a thick cheesy material; remove this by pressure and the aid of the forceps. In severe eye cases a few drops of iodine solution may be used without ill effects. These eye lesions are often difficult to treat.

The above treatment is somewhat drastic and will take a little time, say three minutes for each bird, but if followed out thoroughly also given a trial in suitable quarters it will be found to clear up most cases of roup.

Chicken Pox May Develop.

Another condition which may appear along with roup, or as an independent disease, is the so called chicken pox, in which scabs and pustules form on the wattles, combs and eye lids. The lesions are often about the size of a five cent piece and commence as small light raised spots that exude a thin discharge and soon become converted into crust like scabs. This condition is quite contagious and requires prompt treatment to control. Catch the bird, and with a small rather dull knife scrape off the lesions until healthy tissue is reached. Don't be afraid of a little. Scrape well, then dress with iodine solution rubbed in well over entire head and wattles. Three or four treatments every other day will clear up most cases. Give birds opening medicine and remove from flock during treatment. Birds that recover from chicken pox are immune from further attacks. It is most essential to remove any ailing birds from the flock and it should be remembered that the discharges from the lesions carry infection so that all soiled litter and dead birds should be burnt.

These Diseases Spread by Contact.

Roup and chicken pox spread from bird to bird by actual contact. Often the first case is introduced into a flock by the purchase of birds from infected premises or by handling of birds by a person who has recently been in contact with affected birds, or on the shoes or clothing. The best way to prevent roup is to preserve cleanliness in poultry runs and houses; to watch the flock carefully and at once remove and treat sick birds. It is advisable that the person who treats the sick fowls should recognize that he is dealing with a very contagious disease and should change outer clothing, clean boots and wash hands thoroughly before going among the flock, especially young chicks. Neither roup or chicken pox are communicable to man or any other animal.

Stern Life In Labrador

With many prospectors making their way into the inhospitable country north of Quebec by various methods of transportation at the present time, in some cases staking their claims in search of that elusive commodity, gold, the mention of Labrador at once quickens the pulse of the stay-at-homes who, in a comfortable armchair or comfortably unconscious in a hammock on the verands, visualize the life of these pioneers, no doubt, from some novel they have read. But "all is not gold that glitters," as many will find out, in addition to which the rigors of camp life is a dreary country, the difficulty of obtaining food and the lack of traveling facilities will break the spirit of many a sturdy campaigner ere he returns to civilization. Conditions of this bleak province were graphically described by Rev. Harry Gordon, of Cartwright, Labrador, in a recent address at St. John's, Newfoundland, where he lectured on "Life in Labrador," and the following extract is taken from the Evening Advocate of that city:

Mr. Gordon said that the recent reports of the findings of gold on the Labrador coast had drawn considerable attention to this isolated part of the British Empire. Political interest has also been aroused by the Labrador boundary dispute between the Governments of Newfoundland and Canada. The records of the early discoverers of Labrador do not err on the side of undue enthusiasm with regard to the country or its climate. It is consistently described as an inhospitable region and unfit for the abode of man. Its mineral possibilities have for long been known, but no very serious attempts to prospect them seem to have been made. Few countries have suffered as much from the judgment of casual visitors. Even such an ardent Labradorian as the famous Major Cartwright was impressed at first with the unattractiveness of the coast. An endless succession of bare and barren cliffs, flanked by chains of small and rocky islands, compels the mind to picture unfavorably the prospect of any prolonged sojourn in the country.

A closer view, then, as a complete and agreeable surprise, puts behind the rocky ramparts and enter one of the many large and beautiful bays in which Labrador abounds. Within a few miles the whole face of nature takes on a sudden change. Bare and barren rocks give place to grass-covered slopes, thick fringes of woodland run down almost to the water's edge; the breath of scented air proclaims the presence of miles of berry-land within close proximity. Labrador in summer can offer many attractions to the tourist and sportsman.

The coddsherry along the outside of the coast offers a steady living to thousands of fishermen, who year by year scatter themselves among its creek and coves, the bays and rivers abound in salmon and trout. Only the appalling plague of mosquitoes spoils what would otherwise be an ideal holiday ground.

Internal evidence is available to show that Labrador was the scene of long and bitter warfare between the Indians of the interior and the Esquimaux of the coast. Even to-day there is little love lost between the races that dwell along the bays and rivers to purchase engagement rings. Also he related a number of anecdotes about the same timorous Indians.

The visitor thought the arrangement a good one.

"Then you buy business in engagement rings?"

"Very much. Wears a big one herself."

Rescued From a Bog.

The latest "remarkable" moose story to come out of the north is told by Fireman F. T. Parker, of Cobalt, N. O., who relates a novel experience with a pair of monarchs of the forest who had become bogged in a "lake" of muskeg. They were first sighted by Fireman Parker and Engineer Vincent, who were proceeding south, just north of Holland Station in the Englehart-Cochrane division. The pair of moose, a bull and a cow, had evidently jumped the railway fence and had landed squarely in a muskeg bog, side by side. When first sighted the cow was only head and ears above the surface, and the bull with only his front legs out in the open. Being already behind time the trainmen attached a note to a lump of coal which they tossed to the section foreman on their way south.

The section gang on arriving on the scene built a platform of ties in front of the bull, and by dint of much persuasion he was induced to place his front hoofs on the support and drag himself out, after which he immediately vanished into the bush. The cow was so far submerged that rescue seemed hopeless, but by the aid of a rope which was finally secured around her body she was dragged to the surface. When the ropes were removed she took cognizance of her rescuers with a mild stare of curiosity, after which she moved off for a few yards, halted again to regard the group and then walked off leisurely toward the bush.

BY THE RED RIVER

(1) A train of Red River carts laden with furs that trav elled down Portage Avenue, the longest street in the world, from Fort Edmonton to the Canadian Pacific rards, Winnipeg.
(2) Fort Garry Gate, Winnipeg.
(3) A part of "Lower Fort Garry" known as "Stone Fort," still in good repair.

NOT long since, Fort Garry was the point of exchange between the traders and hunters of the plains—the bartering point of the great fur country to the west. The fur traders flocked around the fort, snatching every opportunity for trade and thus, within a stone's throw of Fort Garry, was begun the foundation of the city of Winnipeg. The lake sixty miles to the north had long since been named "Winnipeg," a contraction of the Cree Indian "Oui-nipigue" or "Winnipie," meaning "Win"—murky, and "Nipi"—water, so the name was adopted for the new metropolis.

Across the river was the old Catholic settlement of St. Boniface and one ranges up and down the corridors of history walking its streets, overshaded by great, old trees, gazing in the mellowed cathedral and buildings, with the imprint of time on them. It was as early as 1817 that a band of French soldiers made their headquarters at Point Douglas and established St. Boniface.

There are now over 500 miles of streets in Winnipeg and many of the names are rich in historic suggestion, such as Portage avenue, Logan avenue, the Lord Selkirk Highway, the Fort Garry drive. These famous driveways lure the visitor and resident alike and none are more popular than the Fort Garry drive with its sylvan trails and leafy shades through "Wildwood" where the roads follow the serpentine windings of the Red River.

Following the Pembina Highway to the fine new Agricultural college a fine road leads to the quaint town of St. Norbert, with its dominating crosses and church spire. The most interesting place in this "Fair Land" is the open air church, nestled in a grove of Manitoba maples, elms and oaks. With its candles always burning and the altar brilliant in its sylvan setting.

Just past the Trappist monastery at a point where the La Salle joins the Red River. Turning onto the Lord Selkirk Highway, through a district of rich historic interest, one finds the quaint old city of Old St. John's—its college sombre, its cemetery clad cathedral restful and its lovely old graveyard a mass of summer bloom, the last resting place of many of the young Canadians who fell in the Riel rebellion.

RICH PRE-CAMBRIAN ROCKS.

Early Scientist Vindicated by Recent Gold Discoveries.

The rush for gold in the Rouyn country in northwestern Quebec has brought additional gratification to men of scientific mind who have long upheld the merits of the pre-Cambrian rocks of Northern Ontario as a source of mineral wealth. Strange as it may now seem, there were scientists who contested this theory until a relatively short time ago, but the upholders of pre-Cambrian claim to have been finally vindicated by the rich discoveries of the Sudbury, Cobalt, Kirkland Lake, Porcupine and other recent camps. If the efforts at gold discovery in the Rouyn are justified by results, the pre-Cambrian upholders will feel they have been still further finally justified. In the near future the Imperial Institute will publish in England a monograph on the gold zones of the empire which will contain an account of the Canadian pre-Cambrian mineral formation of similar nature.

It is around the life and achievements of Sir William Logan that the discussion naturally has largely centred. Sir William, although a native of Scotland, was Canada's first great scientist, being head of the Geological survey for many years, and one of the founders of the Royal Canadian Institute. As you look upon his face, as pictured in a bronze relief in front of the Victoria Museum at Ottawa, the impression is unavoidable that in his rugged features and whiskers he seems almost a part of the rocks themselves.

Nearly eighty years ago Sir William Logan championed the pre-Cambrian formation and recommended its exploration for economic minerals. There was opposition to his theory, and the development of the north was still further held up by the dispute as to ownership as between the Dominion and the provinces. Sir Thomas Holland, the great authority on pre-Cambrian in Europe, who is on a visit to Canada in 1912, observed the similarity between the pre-Cambrian of Canada and the pre-Cambrian which produced the gold of India. It is expected that the notice of British scientists will be still further attracted to the same subject during the visit of the British association to Toronto next year.

A mining district that is now producing gold, silver, nickel and copper at the rate of a million dollars per month is given by the engineers of the Dominion government as worth forty million dollars a year seems to be its own best answer to geological theories.

TRIBUTE PAID TO COW

BANQUET HELD IN HONOR OF MOST WONDERFUL MILKER.

Agassis May Echo Showed Her Royal Strain at a Very Early Age and Has Broken All Records as a Producer of Milk and Butter—Three Hundred Guests Assembled to Hail This Animal.

The most wonderful cow in the world, Agassis Segis May Echo, registered number 15,388, had the most wonderful public reception one night toward the end of March, in her home town of Agassis, British Columbia, to celebrate her record-breaking feat of milk and butter production during a period of 365 days. In that time she gave 30,886 pounds of milk, which yielded 1,345 pounds of butter fat, which is equal to 1,675 pounds of butter. This is 300 pounds more butter than the previous world champion produced.

The "champion cow Queen" is to-day the world's record butter producer for a year period, in all classes, in all breeds, and in all ages. She has warned with her absolutely highest honors in cowdom. She has given nineteen times her own weight in milk, and almost her own weight in butter during the year. At the same time she has added one hundred pounds to her own weight. She now weighs 1,800 pounds.

Agassis May Echo, to give her part of her titles, showed her royal strain at a very early age. As a two-year-old she produced 13,382 pounds of milk, and 542 pounds of butter fat a year, more than double the production of the average good cow. Her dam, Agassis Segis Echo, at the same time produced 6,568 pounds of milk and 277 pounds of butter fat.

Echo has a truly royal appetite. On the day of her highest output she consumed 165 pounds of grain, also mangles and 31 pounds of grain, also a small quantity of corn silage and hay. For her seven days' butter production she ate 36.68 and for thirty days 140 pounds.

She is now in her fifth year, and will probably be kept for many years to come transforming vast quantities of feed into butter fat.

After the great year-long test was over, at the end of last March, it was only natural that the citizens of Agassis should desire to fittingly honor their most noted resident. And honor her they did. Three hundred, in the dim, long past, four thousand years ago, the ancient Egyptians worshipped the bull; magnificent were the processions and many the sacrifices in its honor.

And toward the end of the month of March, 1923, witness a cow being highly honored in townwise, in which manner. In Agassis and adjacent region a public holiday was declared and the banquet hall was decorated largely and with taste. The best citizens of the town lent their art treasures, their silver and their napery for the occasion. Palms and ferns in benches and the walls of the great loft of the barn of the Dominion Experimental Farm which housed the world's champion, the "Queen," and banqueting tables were set in the loft, to which sat down 300 people, some of the guests famous cattlemen from all over the world.

When all the gathering was seated, the "Queen" was brought in to be accorded such a reception as never a cow had received before. She proved equal to her name and fame. Calmly she walked down the long aisle between the tables. A banner was raised above her. The 300 guests drank her health in her own milk. They praised her to her face, just as courtiers of old did royalty. Then men made speeches in her honor.

The bull of the ancient Egyptians stands graved in stone, telling of gods, honors to the bovine race. Perhaps a monument may some day be raised to this modern milk producer.

What Sir Michael Saw.

Sir Michael Sadler, vice-chancellor of Leeds University, landed at Southampton recently on his return from his visit to Canada. In an interview with our representative, who met him on his arrival, Sir Michael acknowledged the warm hospitality which he and the other English representatives had experienced. He said he was much impressed by the value set upon education by all classes of the Dominion. The Canadian university he said, are a chain of intellectual lighthouses from coast to coast, and are capital achievement of statesmanship. Sir Michael also spoke vaguely of Mr. H. A. Fricker and the Mendelssohn Choir, and the far-reaching influence of Mr. Fricker's work in Canada.—Yorkshire Post.

The Waiter's Lost Plan.

Sir Basil Thomson, late assistant commissioner of London, Eng., police and director of the special branch at Scotland Yard, who knows as much secret war history as any man living, has published some of the interesting chapters of spy history in his book, "Queer People." Among the more amusing stories is the following: "On his travels with our representative, he put down to denounce a waiter in one of the large hotels, and brought documentary evidence with them. It was a menu card, on which the plan in pencil made upon the back. They believed it to be a plan of Kensington Gardens, with the palace and the roughly-drawn figure an oblong figure. They had seen the waiter in the act of drawing the plan at an unoccupied table. I sent for him, and found before me a spruce little Swiss, with his hair cut en brosse, and a general air of extreme suprise. He gave me a frank account of all his movements, and then I produced the plan. He gazed at it a moment, and then burst out laughing. 'So that is what you call a plan, Monsieur, I made it, and then I lost it. You see, I am new to the hotel, and in order to satisfy the head waiter I put down my principal dishes on one of the tables, and marked a cross against those I had to order after.'"

TO EXPECTANT MOTHERS

A Letter from Mrs. Smith Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her.

Trenton, Ont.—"I am writing to you in regard to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I would not be without it. I have taken it before all of my children was born and afterwards, and I can truly say that before my first baby was born I had short-ness of breath and ringing in my ears. I felt as if I would never pull through. My husband told me to get my husband told him what the Vegetable Compound had done for his wife and advised him to have me take it for me. After the fourth bottle I was a different woman. I have four children now, the eldest always had a weak back, but since Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a great help as it seems to make confinement easier. I recommend it to my friends."—Mrs. Fred B. Smith, John St., Trenton, Ont.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent medicine for expectant mothers, and should be taken during the entire period. It has a general effect to strengthen and tone up the entire system, so that it may work in every respect at the time when it is most needed. Thousands of women testify to this fact.

C

The Last Duel.

The last duel to be fought in Toronto has become known in local history as the Jarvis-Ridout affair. The participants were members of the famous Family Compact and as such, of course on intimate social relations. Young John Ridout, son of the surveyor-general of this province, had been a midshipman on the ship "Royal George" on Lake Ontario in 1813. Samuel Peter Jarvis, who was somewhat older and a friend of Mr. Jarvis, secretary of the province, had been a captain in the army under Brock at the capture of Detroit by the British in 1812.

In the year 1817 before the duel took place some member of the Ridout family was said to have remarked that Samuel Jarvis, as guardian to his two sisters, had sent the young ladies to Quebec and had done certain things against their will on the pretext of obtaining an order that he might secure their share of the parental inheritance. Samuel Jarvis, on this report, had called at the Ridout home one day and demanded a retraction. But the retraction was not forthcoming. Subsequently he had one or two interviews with young John Ridout, who either denied that such gossip had ever been circulated by a member of the family or else refused the charge. It is said that he broke off the conversation on the last occasion by striking Jarvis in the face and challenging him to fight with pistols.

The challenge was accepted by the older man, who, in the code of the day, had no alternative but to send the blow. On the morning appointed Jarvis repaired to the appointed place on the Humber and waited two hours for his opponent, but he did not appear. Investigation showed that Ridout's father, hearing of the trouble, had locked his son in a room. Young Ridout, however, promptly issued a second challenge and this time he and his opponent met in the woods at a point near the present junction of Yonge and Gloucester streets, where the younger man, a mere boy, was said in an affair which drew the deepest gloom over the little town of York.

An Early Visitor.

The story of an early visit to Upper Canada is narrated by Mr. A. Gifford, of Sincoe, concerning his ancestors. "My maternal ancestors came to Canada immediately after the revolution in the United States," he says. "My father's people were known as Puritans, and came to America from the west of England in the early part of the 17th century. My mother's people were Quakers, and came from the north of England to what is now Rhode Island about the same time.

"My great-grandfather drove cattle from the southern shore of Lake Champlain, in Vermont, to the nearest French settlement in Lower Canada, and on one occasion decided to see what Canada was like, and so tramped up north and across to the St. Lawrence, thence along the north shore of Lake Ontario to the Niagara, upon which he never moved until, never seeing a white face from the time he left the French settlement until he reached the Hudson. He took notes of the country as he passed through it, and on his return home told me boys, of whom he had eight, that if they ever left Vermont they were to go to Lake Ontario, for there the hope is now located. There they found another Hudson Bay fur trader, being the second white man they had met, and they took up their abode on the north shore of the lake in what are now the townships of Hamilton, Hope and Clarke."

An Unusual Sight.

Canadian tourists landing in Naples during the first week of June had the rare privilege of a view of Vesuvius in theatrical eruption.

The eruption, though harmless was intensely interesting scientifically, because it was the first flow of lava inside the immense crater owing to breaks in several cones.

The lava has been overflowing the cones and forming immense fiery bulwarks which are a fine spectacle by day and become marvelous at night, when gigantic columns of smoke show bright red against the sky. All the lava coming from the cones is incadescent.

Farmers growing vines and vegetables at the very foot of the volcano became terrified at the sudden spectacleshut they were quieted by the assurance of experts that the eruption was harmless. Visitors immediately flocked to see the superb spectacle and to watch women and children busy gathering beans, peas and tomatoes in the shadow of the erupting volcano.

The Napanee Kiddies' Minstrel Review scored a big hit on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, July 26, 27, and 28, for the grand opening of The Strand, under the management of Mr. George Tustin. The cast, under the direction of Miss Millie Bell, of Montreal, carried out their parts splendidly. Special music and songs, composed by Mr. Arthur Ashworth, of Montreal, Canada's famous song and music composer, were rendered under him as musical director of the show. The Comedians were, Fred Kane, Fred Ballard, Russell Stevens, Don Normile, Don Huyck and Aubrey Bruyea. The girls who took part in the review were, Aileen and Francis Fox, Hazel O'Neil, Doris Lucas, Marguerite young and Pauline Card. Mr. Fred Kane as Lovin' Sam, the Shiek of Alabam, kept the audience in uproarious laughter during his funny presentations. Russell Stevens as Rastus Jackson, Tennessee, was the dancer of the show. Don Normile as Barney Google and Jim Perry as Spark Plug, was a big hit in the bill. Don Huyck and Russell Stevens as Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Shean, gave the audience a laugh. Miss Aubrey Bruyea, of Trenton, sang two splendid ballads, "That's What God Made Mothers For," and "Call Me Back Again Pal O' Mine," as an encore number pleased the audience. Mr. Tustin, the new director of the Strand, wishes to express through this paper his sincere thanks to the cast and public who were present and witnessed the show and he hopes to give many more such splendid surprises as the Napanee Kiddies Minstrel Review, who opened the Strand under his new management.

What and Where Kent's Hole Is.

A cavern in the vicinity of Torquay, England, famous not only for its relics of primitive man, but also for its remains of extinct animals, is known as Kent's Hole. Although the existence of this cave had been known from time immemorial, it did not attract the attention of scientists until 1825. Excavations were carried on by Pengelly from 1865 to 1880, at a cost of nearly $10,000 and yielded results of the highest importance to the science of anthropology.

There were found flint tools of the Paleolithic age and implements of bone, such as needles, awls and harpoons. The animal remains discovered comprised those of the lion, hyena, bear, wolf, fox, rhinoceros, mammoth, Irish elk and reindeer, showing that those animals once lived in Britain and were co-temporaneous with man of the stone age.
